Roosevelt Will Take Simple Oath

WASHINGTON, Feb. 1.—(U.P.)—Franklin D. Roosevelt will become the 31st president of the United States at the precise moment on March 4 when he recites after Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes the solemn oath of office prescribed in the Constitution.

This brief and simple act is the oldest of the inaugural ceremonies. The oath is of the same simplicity that marks the Constitution.

Since the early days of the republic it has been administered on the broad east portico of the capitol.

The Simple Oath

As the official company gathers on the pillared portico, the president-elect, facing the chief justice, places his hand on the Bible and slowly repeats the words:

"I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of president of the United States, and will to teh best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Numerous traditions surround the brief ceremony. When the incoming president places his hand on the Bible it is at a spot previously designated by him. When he kisses the Bible afterward it is at the same designated spot.

Text of Address

Sometimes, as did President Hoover, the inaugural address, delivered just afterward, is based on an excerpt from this same section.

It was formerly customary to use the Bible belonging to the Supreme Court. President Harding, though, chose the one used by George Washington which is in the possession of the Masonic Lodge in Alexandria, Va., to which Washington belonged.

President Theodore Roosevelt started the practice of furnishing his own Bible. He had been promised one as the gift of Afro-American bishops, but when the tome was delivered to the capitol it was found to weigh almost 500 pounds, entirely too large for the supreme court clerk to hold. Roosevelt substituted his own.

President Coolidge used the Bible which his mother gave him as a youth.

No Protection

Despite sometimes inclement weather the oath taking ceremony has been without any protection from the elements other than the high roof of the portico.

An exception was made in the case of President Taft. A long range weather forecaster had promised blue skies and springlike weather but the day before the ceremony the weather changed. A blizzard blew down from the northwest. On the night before the inaugural the temperature tumbled.

Pennsylvania avnue was sanded to prevent the horse-drawn carriages from slipping. Laborers attempted to wash the snow from the grandstands, but the water froze. The Taft ceremonies were moved to the Senate chamber.

Just Another Job for Secret Service

WASHINGTON.—(U.P.)—To thousands of employes of the federal government, March 4 means the end of a job, but to the White House corps of the U. S. secret service it means only a new responsibility.

When Herbert Hoover leaves the White House, the secret service men, who have been his constant shadow for four years, end one job. But they step to the side of Franklin D. Roosevelt and assume another.

The little group who safeguard the life of the president and his family are in a unique position. They, alone of all federal employes, dictate to the president. They often veto his plans when they might carry him into danger. Of course, the president does not have to obey, but he usually does.

Warren G. Harding proved a real problem for the secret service. He disliked being watched constantly. It made him feel too much like a prisoner. So occasionally he slipped away alone to take a walk or to visit some friend. The secret service men spent anxious moments until they found him.

Calvin Coolidge made companions of the secret service men. They taught him, a retiring man unused to the out-of-doors, to fish and enjoy life in the woods. Col. E. W. Starling also taught Mr. Coolidge trapshooting, which he enjoyed.

During the Hoover administration relations between the president and the secret service men have been friendly most of the time, but not jovial.

Life in the White House secret service detachment is a series of contrasts. Danger alternates with pure boredom. For days the men may loll around with nothing to do. Then, suddenly, the president decides to make a trip by motor or train—and their real work begins.

Such journeys involve days of strain and danger, when the presidential guardians must be ever at his side, ready to act quickly if a crank, or assassin, threatens.

Richard Jervis, a tall, gray-haired man of distinguished appearance, has been chief of the White House secret service since the Wilson administration. He became a member of the corps in 1907, while Theodore Roosevelt was president. Thus he has guarded the lives of six presidents—Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover—without a single serious incident.

Second in command of the group of Colonel Starling, a tall, powerful-framed Kentuckia. It is he who makes advance arrangements for the president's safety.

WEEK-END CAMP FACES OBLIVION

WASHINGTON, Jan. 31.—(U.P.)—Occupation of the White House by Frananklin D. Roosevelt may mean temporary oblivion for his predecessor's famous Rapidan week-end fishing camp.

The new president is a seafaring man. He may not avail himself of the opportunity to seek rest and recreation in the Virginia foot-hills at the log-cabin rendezvous established by Mr. Hoover and donated to the government for the use of presidents.

With the arrival of Mr. Roosevelt, Washington recalls the administrations of five presidents before Mr. Hoover, when a week-end away from work was spent aboard the yacht Mayflower, cruising down the Potomac.

Passing of Mayflower

The coming of Mr. Hoover meant the passing of the Mayflower. In the interests of economy, he ordered it decommissioned in 1929.

Theodore Roosevelt ordered the Mayflower attached to the White House. While president he frolicked in long absent her for short cruises. His successors used the yacht extensively.
