Construction to Begin on Church Unit

Construction is slated to begin this month on a three-story educational unit at 1551 El Prado for the First Methodist Church. Cost of the project is $52,568, church spokesmen reported this week.

Cost of construction includes the addition of a patio and the remodeling of the basement of the present church building. Contract for the work was awarded Jan. 14 to the Hahn Construction Co. of Compton, according to Robert Reid, chairman of the building committee.

Construction should be completed in about five months, Reid reported. The educational building, to be used as a church school, includes a recreation room, kitchenette and classrooms. Architects were Orr-Strange-Inslee of Los Angeles.

Arrangements have been made with the contractors to sub-contract some of the work on the building to the men of the church.

The church administrative unit and some school departments are located in the former parsonage.
