CHP Warns

Park Auto Or Have Repaired

Drivers cited for mechanical violations do not have until the date of their court appearance to correct the deficiency, California Highway Patrol Commissioner Bradford M. Crittenden said this week.

"Many persons apparently believe they can operate their vehicles until the date set for court appearance before correcting the defect. The law provides that no person shall operate a vehicle after notice by a traffic officer that the vehicle is in unsafe condition or improperly equipped except as may be required to get to his home or to a garage."

The situation is identical if the driver receives a written mechanical warning. He may operate the vehicle only to get it home or to a garage.

* * *

"IF THE DRIVER continues to operate after receiving a citation or warning, he is liable for further citations because the violation is a continuing one."

He pointed out that if the defect is sufficiently hazardous, the officer can prevent the vehicle from moving anywhere until the condition is corrected.
