The sights and sounds of people in distress move some to pity, others to tears. Michelle Beese is moved to act.

Deeply touched by photographs of children who are casualties of the fighting in Vietnam, she contacted the Committee of Responsibility, a nation-wide, non-political group of citizens formed to raise funds for the medical care of Vietnamese children flown to this country for treatment. The Committee's immediate need was money, so Michelle Beese, a children's portrait painter, pledged her next $1000 in commissions. She is still working, and nearing her goal — giving an example to all of true compassion and meaningful activism.
