Kerr, Dumke Clash On Quarter System

(From Education News Service)

A hot time is anticipated at a special meeting of the California Coordinating Council on Higher Education (CCHE) when a dispute over conversion of the University of California campuses and the state colleges to all-year operation enters its second round.

Round one occurred last month when UC President Clark Kerr accused the colleges' administration of dragging its feet on conversion and Gov. Edmund G. Brown expressed disappointment with the colleges for the same reason. State College Chancellor Glenn S. Dumke countered with a charge that the Governor based his remarks on an erroneous report.

Round two is scheduled tomorrow in San Francisco. Dumke will return to the fray armed with the complete backing of the Trustees of the State Colleges and their confirmation of the contents of a letter he addressed to Gov. Brown in which he explained the colleges' view of the situation in detail.

* * *

IN ESSENCE, Dumke told the Governor the state colleges are on schedule in meeting their commitment to complete conversion to all-year terms by 1975, and that they are proportionately far ahead of the University in this regard with 18,000 students already on the four-quarter system to the University's 2,000. The University's deadline is 1971.

Dumke also pointed out that by the time the University has converted its first campus, four state college campuses will have been converted. He also noted that in terms of numbers alone, the state colleges face a far greater task with 18 campuses to the University's 9 and 157,000 students against 79,000.

The report on which the governor based his statement was in error, according to Dumke's letter, in that it stated the colleges had asked a two-year extension of its deadline for conversion when in fact it had been Dr. Kerr who requested a two-year extension for the University. Dumke said Kerr and the CCHE staff also recommended the state college's deadline be moved up to 1973.

* * *

DUMKE CITED two reasons why the state colleges feel they cannot convert to all-year operation before 1975. One is the availability of funds. The other is that campus - by - campus conversion was decided upon as an experimental method which will permit the state college trustees and administration to learn as they progress toward full conversion.

The chancellor pointed out that the University enjoys an advantage over the colleges since its administration has full fiscal flexibility and control where Dumke and his staff have none.

"This gives the University a time flexibility we don't enjoy," he said.

Dumke said this gives the University the ability to move into conversion faster initially and also allows its administration to correct mistakes much more quickly.
