Near the Pacific Electric crossing and garage in Los Angeles on Main street, a lady was waiting with three children. Just as he approached, one child, started to cross the street. He thought he could run between the child and the mother and other children, but the mother and children suddenly started toward the child, and to avoid hitting them he turned into an adobe road, skidded and broke a rear wheel. He said he had driven 45,000 miles and this was the first accident. If it had been a light car he would have turned turtle but the "Hup" kept the road.

What is more annoying than to run across a man who exposes his ignorance by saying "Is that so?" when he can get his home paper 52 times a year for less than a nickel a week.

When you see a woman who is proud of her hat it is safe to bet that it's only about the second time she's had it on.

We satisfy that tingling thirst at the Rio Tan Soda Fountain.—Adv.
