(By AUNT HANNAH)

Come into the serving room, Lizzie, dear. I have a piece of work for you to do. Your aunt and I are going into the city this morning to do a little shopping. We will be gone a few hours, and I am leaving this frill for you to hem. It is only one yard in length and will not take all of your time, but do the work first; then the remainder of the time is yours.

Now, mind, do the work first, and this afternoon we will all go to the matinee. Good-bye. O, good-bye, sweet mother. I'm so glad.

Lizzie sat down and at once began to sew. The work was almost finished when she stopped to take the last thread from the spool that would set her free. The spool fell from her lap and rolled across the room. Up sprang her pretty Maltese cat and ran after it, beginning a boxing game that was very funny. Lizzie dropped her hands in her lap and became a silent spectator to the game. The thread was unwinding fast and yards of it dangled from the cat's paws. Why, Kitty, you are making lace of my thread. You must stop. So she jumped up and ran after her, but the cat outran her and into the yard she sped, dragging the spool that kept unwinding. At last the chase ended and Lizzie, turning into the house, discovered that her frill had been in the race and had lodged in a little mud hole, which had unfitted it for further use. O, what shall I do? The best I know is to wash it out, dry it and finish it before mother comes home. She soon had it ready to iron, then in a short time it was ready to hem, but as she turned to put the iron away an awkward move caused her to drop the iron to the floor, and in the attempt to get it up she burned her hand badly. My! How it did hurt! O, dear, she said, the work must be finished. I'll just bind some cotton on my hand and stop the burning. Then where will I ever find any cotton? I know there is some in mother's jewel case, but she don't allow me to open it. However, it is my last chance. So she climbed up on the dresser, took down the key, unlocked the forbidden case, took out the cotton, locked it again and hung up the key. In great pain the frill was finished. She wrapped her hand, tried in vain to get relief, but none came.

The carriage drove up bringing mother and aunt. Lizzie did not rush out to meet them as she usually did, but stood in the door with her hand behind her. They came in and noticed that something was wrong. At this moment mother spied something shining on the floor, and picking it up she discovered her beautiful diamond ring. Whatever in the world has happened? Lizzie, come here. What does this mean? The poor child suffering from the burn and great mortification burst into tears and confessed all. Upon examination the hand was badly burned, but mother, like all good, sensible mothers would do, forgave her daughter, dressed her hand and put her to bed to think over her experience of the forenoon.

It is useless to say that the disappointment of not going to the matinee and the mortification of exposing her disobedience was punishment enough for one day. And never again did she unlock mother's box of jewels in search of help to cover the tracks of disobedience. "Be sure your sins will find you out."

"When I prays to de Lawd," said an old negro, "Sen' me a chicken. I ha'dly ebber gets it; but when I prays, 'Oh, Lawd, sen' me to a chicken,' den I most always has a chicken foh mah Sunday dinnah."

A writer sent a poem to an editor, who, it seems, had little use for verse. The title of the poem was "Why Am I Alive?" The editor wrote, when he returned the poem, "Because you sent your poem by mail instead of delivering it by person."

Two Irishmen made their boat fast to a wharf and went to sleep. The boat broke away during the night and drifted far out to sea. When Mike awoke he could see nothing but water. He shook Pat and said, "Wake up, quick, Pat. We're not here at all."

Pat roused himself and looked out and replied, "No, begorra! And we're a long ways from here."

Mrs. Transit—You'll like to work here. You'll be treated as an equal. The New Cook—You'd better keep your place, ma'am. I won't tolerate no familiarity.

SNAPSHOTS

A whole lot of scenery in this section would be a good deal more attractive if we didn't have to watch the rats in the road.

No sensible man would swear to the foolish things he says during courtship, and no sensible woman would want him to.

Maybe the reason those 15,000,000 million immigrants didn't come to the United States, as it was reported they were to do, was because they heard we were sending free grub over there already.

Germany said she couldn't pay and they sent the militia to camp on her door step. Wouldn't it be fine if we could all get out of paying that easily.

We see a lot of citizens upon whom prosperity is smiling, but it looks as though she's giving most of us the horse-laugh.

If you want to see the value of anything climb, then just make that thing difficult to secure.

Debs went from prison to Washington unattended. That isn't hard to do if you're railroad fare is paid by somebody else.

Judge Landis might get back at his critics by declaring it's better to take two salaries than it is to accept one you don't earn.

If moving pictures cause all the trouble, what caused it before we had moving pictures?

Most of us are glad that we lived in the old days when you could kiss a girl and not taste anything but girl.

There are two good reasons why a sensible man never lies to his wife. One is he knows it's wrong, and the other is he knows she isn't going to believe him anyhow.

Ford has invented a way to secure milk without a cow. We hope he'll soon discover how to print a paper without type and ink.

It is mighty encouraging to note that the great American hen is once more back on a normal basis of production.

Many a man goes broke letting his wife have the money—rather than argue with her and lose both argument and money.

Maybe some time a smart legislator will figure it out so we can make a dollar without having to pay $1.09 tax on it.

Grandmother didn't have a shelf-load of cook books and she didn't know what a calory was, but when it came to getting up a real meal she had the world beat.

Shooting husbands is getting to be a habit, and we suppose there'd be a lot more of it only some women are afraid they might then have to go to work for a living.

Here's a tip to those who want to knock—a good dog never lets go of what he's got just for a chance to growl.

It's human nature to borrow—it's just as much human nature to forget to take it back.

We sometimes feel confident that more men would join the church if it had some sort of secret pass-word and a grip.

Old Job had a lot of patience. But not much more than the gang now hunting new jobs down at Washington.

It has about gotten so that every time Uncle Sam gets a few dollars ahead some foreign nation sends over a committee to ask him for a loan.

The average man is grateful for what he receives, but it's hard for him to be thankful for the things he doesn't get.

A Chicago woman in her will left $8000 for the care of a pet dog. And if the dog dies we suppose the money goes to the husband.

Every woman knows that she talks too much, but what she does not know is that there's a cure for it.

In this glorious land they put lotteries out of business and let Wall street run. In case of the lotteries you did stand to win once in a while.

There's no question but the Lord is always on the right side, but at that He doesn't seem to keep a lot of people from making foolish blunders.
