"AS UNTO ME"

During a revival held in one of our southern towns a poor, hard-working woman was wonderfully converted. She was a widow of small means, with no help for support, excepting a son about sixteen years old. The following winter was severe, and from exposure and hardships she fell a victim to pneumonia. A physician was summoned and her case required immediate attention, as it was pronounced critical. The physician's wife and myself went to lend a hand, and with some others came to the rescue. The patient was soon made comfortable. There was no one to stay in the house. So inquiry was made about her son. She said he had been found carrying a pistol, which was against the law, and he was arrested and fined. Not being able to pay his fine he was sent to the county farm to work out his cost. By request he was allowed to come home to nurse his mother, with the understanding that he would return when released by the physician.

She failed rapidly and the indications were that she could not recover. There were three of us who went almost daily and ministered to her wants. One of our party said one day: "Mary, is there anything you want that I can do?" he said painfully: "I would like a gown with longer sleeves. These are too short. I get cold." The gown was brought, but it was no better for the woman was a little one and the same trouble was with the fresh gown. I thought one of nine would be better, but mine are all new and nice ones. I hate to part with one, but to ease my conscience I carried a nice, clean quilt to her. I didn't go back the next day nor the next. I kept thinking of those long, bony arms.

That night I could not sleep. I tried to pray. I said: "Lord, I want to serve Thee faithfully. I want to be used of Thee. Give me more grace to do Thy will." The gown seemed to rustle and say: "You won't use what you have. True, Lord, I have been selfish. I have been remiss. Forgive me. I will go tomorrow and carry the gown to Mary. I will put it on her myself. I will read again to her. I will pray with her for perhaps the last time. I will do it is unto Thee my Lord. Thou who hast redeemed me from sin and saved my soul."

As a lay meditating I fancied my room door opened and my watch log strode to the hearth and quietly stretched himself on the rug in front of the fireplace. The clock struck four. It was too dark for me to go alone to the cottage, so I dozed off to sleep.

The twittering of the birds in the big mulberry tree near by assured me that day was dawning. I arose and dressed, and starting out to my astonishment I found my door locked. Then I said: "I must have dreamed." As soon as I could manage I went to Mary's. On approaching I noticed the door closed, which usually stood open, and when I timidly knocked a woman came, and when I asked to see Mary she said she slipped away about four o'clock his morning.

I have no language to express my feelings at that moment. I turned my steps homeward and the bitter tears of regret and sorrow fell on my cheeks. I repented and was forgiven, but the blessing I might have enjoyed was not given, and the lesson I learned lives with me today. Beware!

"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least, ye did it not unto me."
