MIRACLE PICTURE OF 1921—HARDING SENT BY WIRELESS!

Twenty minutes after this moment during President Harding's speech at Annapolis, the accompanying picture was ready for publication.

Paris, over 3,000 miles away! It is not a perfect picture, but IT IS THE FIRST SENT BY WIRELESS and after the first has been sent, as an experiment, there is nothing left to do but to perfect the process.

Incidentally, this is the first time that the picture here shown has been printed in an American newspaper. Popular Science Monthly obtained it from Paris, and this newspaper prints it herewith simultaneously with that magazine, by special arrangement.

The pioneer in photography by wireless is M. Edouard Belin, a Frenchman, and it was his radio apparatus that sent the accompanying picture from Annapolis, Maryland, to Paris, France, a few weeks ago. He has been experimenting for years with machines for sending photographs by telegraph, and he has sent numbers of them over the wires and by cable. Finally, this year, he invented an apparatus to send them by wireless. He brought his machine to America, and when he learned that President Harding was to make a speech to the naval cadets at Annapolis, he connected it with the big wireless station there.

The result was that a paper in Paris had a photograph of the president speaking BEFORE he had concluded his address 3000 miles away.
