$400,000 FOR ADVERTISING FUND IS RAISED IN SAN FRANCISCO

Inception of the Campaign Californians Inc., and the gigantic campaign for settlers it is conducting, had its genesis in the practical initiative of San Francisco business men, members of the ancient order of American hustlers. These men had long recognized the need for some such enterprise to build up the great interior valleys of California.

A group of representative business men stretched out a leisurely lunch hour to consider whether the task of building an empire on the western edge of the continent was too big a job for San Francisco to tackle. In the time it takes to smoke a cigar, a decision was reached. San Francisco would tackle the job.

Followed then a burst of the Followed then a burst of the activity with which every now and again San Francisco demonstrates her youth and virility. A public meeting was called by the mayor, and the announcement made that San Francisco was ready to start the work of bringing at least a million new people to California. Check books, which are trained in San Francisco to respond automatically to any fund for the welfare of California, were taken to the meeting.

welfare of California, were taken to the meeting.

"California," Mayor James Rolph told the assemblage, "has an area of more than 158,000 square miles and a population of four millions. We need more people. We can support thirty million people within our bountary, no larger than California's big counties, supports forty million. The state of New Jersey, which is no larger than some of California's big counties, supports more than three million people. If California were as densely populated as New Jersey, there would be more than sixty million people here. James Bryce has told the world that California is more than a state, that it is an empire, and he did not expended to the support of the support of

It was then that the trained check books of San Franciscans played their role. Four hundred thousand dollars were pledged on the spot and a committee named to plan and undertake the largest campaign in the history of community advertising. Nearly 3000 San Francisco business men subscribed to the fund, in amounts ranging from ten dollars to ten thousand. A noteworthy feature of the campaign is the sense of high responsibility shown by the men who have undertaken to carry it out, through the organization known as "Californians Incorporated," a non-profit corporation formed for that purpose, under the laws of the state. AFTER THREE YEARS

A friend from Maine writes the following story:

In the summer of 1919 my husband sold a gray mare named "Alice" to a man some distance away. We owned at the same time another horse named "Lady." Last autumn my husband's father, driving some miles from home, met Alice and her present owner. The two horses had not seen each other for three years, but while the two men sat and chatted on the highway, Alice kept looking around at Lady and whinnying, saying as well as she could by her actions, "Hello, Lady, how are you!" It was a clear case of recognizing an old friend. A friend from Maine writes the
