UNHAPPY

Dear Mrs. Thompson: I have been going with a fellow for the last four years and I love him with all my heart and soul. I have done everything to make him happy. He was away from me for a while. I have found he has been out with other girls and it just breaks my heart. He makes me cry all the time. I want to go somewhere and forget him. Do you think a man loves a woman when he goes with other girls? He never said anything about marrying me said anything about marrying read anything about marrying read anything about my self. He never had me out to his home. I have gone through with so much I have gone through with so much tat I don't want to live any more. I don't care what happens to me now. What should I do? I know he will never find a girl like me for I have been like a mother to him in every way.

Wandering Jew: The man you by wandering Jew: The man you love is asking too much and giving too little. It is unfair for him to demand "steady company" and then attend public dances with other women. Also you are quite right in feeling that he should not kiss you and forbid you to go with other young men unless he loves you and asks you to marry him. I would advise you to trell him It would advise you to tell him that you want him to feel free to attend dances and go with other girls if he wants to, and you want to be free to do the same since you are not betrothed. If he cares so little for you that he gives you up because of this, you may be sure that he would have dropped you sooner or later anyway.
