OBSERVATIONS

(Continued from Page 1) Individual man. As each new liberty has been gained, another has immediately arisen as a goal. The battle for improved rights has gone on through centuries. It is still going on.

THE strike broke upon England because of miners' pay, but it is really the result of the age-old fight between the individual and the group. It is democracy against autocracy, taking form this time as between a mass of individuals and an economic autocracy represented by a parliamentary government...

WITH the war and its economic aftermaths in England, the general strike was inevitable. That it may develop into a life or death struggle between parliamentary government and socialism is rightly predicted. That it heralds the long-avoided battle between class and mass in England must be obvious to everyone who knows anything at all about sociology and history.

OUR hearts go out in sympathy for all of our English cousins, who thus enter the first stages of what threatens to be a civil war. They deserve sympathy, for the conditions which brought about the crisis were beyond the control of the people. The issue lies between chaos and order; between parliamentary government and Marxism; between socialism and capitalism; between existence of a state in which all individuals must sacrifice much to the common weal in times of economic as well as national stress.

THE whole trouble in England is that individuals, by reason of economics, have necessarily been asked to sacrifice too much. What they were willing to sacrifice in war they refuse to sacrifice in peace—yet the necessity of sacrifice is even greater now than it was when the pathway to it was bloody feet over the face of the world. A pitiful condition, but one in which men with blindness, swinishness and hatred have plunged themselves.

THE turmoil in England brings us back to the question of who won the war. And the answer, flashed over the far horizons of the world, says that there was victory to none. Unless a leader of the type of Lincoln rises tonight in England to lighten the pathway to all, it looks from this distance as though but two things can happen: Either a military dictator will win the day as a despot not unlike Mussolini, or England will follow in the footsteps of Russia.

THE Tuesday evening meetings continue in interest and enthusiasm. Dinner is served at 6:30. The Sunday morning service is a Mother's Day service. The sermon and music will be in harmony with the day.

Board Discusses Boulevard Lights

The Board of Trustees Wednesday night, acting at the behest of Mayor Dennis, considered the question of street lights on Redondo boulevard. Members of the board expressed the opinion that it is a waste of money to keep the lights alight when the city is to pay half the cost of such an installation.
