again. Thus an established code bids fair to be non-ored in the breach not only in the United States, but in Mexico as well. The contentions put forward by Obregon's ad-herents bear, a striking resemblance to thôse with which the Coolidge camp followers seek to sooth doubters on this side of the border. A provision of the Mexican constitution prohibits a President from succeeding himself. This commandment implies that the spirit of the country is opposed to two terms for one man even though they be nonsuccessive. Obregon, therefore, is faced by stiff opposition from the anti-re-electionist groups which have nominated two can-didates. Nothing daunted, however, his trusted lieu-tenants inform Mexicans that their troubled country needs General Obregon; would it not be tragic if they were deprived of his great powers of leadership merely to honor an implied policy and a worn-out precedent? Where have we heard those words before? Of course no constitutional restriction in Mexico in-dicates that North Americans generally are opposed to continuing one man in office for too long a period. The same considerations which fathered the American precedent and have kept it alive for a century and a quarter prompted the restrictive mandate in Mexico's constitution. The authors of the Mexican inhibition knew, as successive American generations have known, that a chief executive, if continued in office too long, can utilize his patronage trowel to fashion a vast po-litical structure inmical to the spirit and intent of democracy. The two republics are confronted with similar prob-leme. democracy. The two republics are confronted with similar prob-lems. However the choice between Obregon and tra-dition is decided, Americans must answer their own consciences with regard to Mr. Coolidge. Are his services so indispensable that honored tradition must shattered in order to secure them?

(Reprinted from The Independent, Boston)

(Reprinted from The Independent, Boston) Pity the poor movie stars whose salaries have been cost of existence as a cinema idol soaring to unknown heights, we cannot see how the darlings can possibly struggle along if their incomes are lopped from ten to wenty-five per cent. Consider just a few of the necessities which have skyrocketed in price since the war. Divorce has gone up 192 per cent, if we remem-price statistics aright. The mean (sic) alimony prid by luminaries of the screen has passed all bounds of reason. It is estimated that these two increases alone affect 93.8 per cent of all picture stars. Per-sonal press agents now actually demand $50 a week. Rambling slope-side mansions in Beverly Hills, once servants, utterly indispensable, insist on receiving $100. . month, and when one has four of them. Really the price of these necessities has become son high that some of the feminine stars are almost even temporarily. What in the world are heartless producers thinking of—cutting salaries!
