For Country Club Wear Choose an Ensemble of Washable Silk

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

To be frocked just right for the occasion, what an uplifted feeling, what poise this gives. And that is why it is not too early to begin this very moment to plan one's wardrobe for vacation days which are so near at hand. Well, let's see—yes, there will be countless informal country club affairs to attend and one will be wanting to take little excursions here and there and oh! for one or several practical dresses which have the chic of a town frock yet something that will launder to the point of always being refreshingly spick-and-span.

"It's here, just such a costume, in this very picture! It's made of wash silk and it's striped, and if there's anything smarter this season than stripes the book of fashion falls to record it, unless possibly polka dots. Indeed, there is quite a rivalry between dots and stripes and oh yes! there is the new star prints. Have you seen them? Perfect five-pointed stars scattered all over just like polka dots. So as far as wash silks are concerned all fashiondom is flaunting the stars and stripes.

Now about this attractive two-piece suit of washable silk here pictured. It is really made of a very unusual silk, for instead of the stripes being printed they are actually woven, the silk threads fast-dyed beforehand. Of course that makes it a very superior material.

While the stripes are multi-color, the leading shade is navy, and so what with the broad suede belt being bright navy, and also the silk tie, the ensemble as a whole gives the impression of being a navy blue outfit. Which is right in line with the call of the mode. This is really going to prove very much of a navy season. Navy straw hats, navy felt hats, navy shoes, navy pocket-books, to accompany the silk or woolen navy suit or ensemble, are to be seen everywhere, on avenue and boulevard.

Speaking about the vogue for stripes, their effectiveness is largely due to artful manner of styling. They are manipulated in all sorts of startling ways, horizontally, vertically, diagonally, sometimes all three ways for the same garment. We haven't been seeing blazer-striped short jackets for many a season, but they have returned in full force, thus emphasizing the importance of stripes in the field of design.

Permanent roads are a good investment—not an expense

History Strides Through Cahuenga Pass on Portland Cement Concrete

Do you remember the old, steep, tortuous roadway that used to wind its way across Cahuenga Pass? It was sufficient for the old rambling horse-drawn carriages—and was endured because there was nothing better—but was pitifully inadequate for the needs of modern motor traffic.

Restless, growing Los Angeles requires substantially paved, wide traffic ways—and is providing them. Today thousands of cars and heavy trucks flow unhampered over Cahuenga Pass on portland cement concrete pavement.

The pavement, 72 feet wide between curbs, was laid thick and heavy for great durability. Its surface is true and even, and remains rigid at all temperatures.

Portland cement concrete is the preferred paving material for modern traffic. It costs less per year than any other surface—and is the safest pavement, wet or dry.

All the facts are in our free booklet "Concrete Streets." Ask for your copy.
