GRAY ENLIVENED BY BRIGHT COLOR

Although gray is one of the excellent colors of the season, most women manage somehow only to look dull and respectable in it. The pursuit of gray to the extent of a felt hat, a soft gray velvet coat, a gray fox collar, a dress of gray silk, gray stockings and gray kid shoes results always in a dull tragedy, and this type of costume usually gives the disheartening impression of some one who wishes to be very well dressed, very lady-like, but who is altogether lacking in originality and daring. But how pleasant is the effect of gray intelligently used! In the illustration, we show an excellent example of this. The costume takes its gray note from the sevens-eighties length coat of flannel—the sort of mixed flannel that men wear. The dress and scarf, however, shun ladylike gray and chose instead orange-and-black plaid. The accessories are black accents—a felt hat, a pair of calfskin walking shoes, with single straps and all-leather heels and a calfskin bag with an amusing dog-leash fastening. The stockings and gloves are wisely a rosy-beige—the same tone as a tanned complexion.
