In the Wake of the 'Quake and Other Lies

Charlie Schultz says his customer didn't notice the shock, 'cause Ford owners are used to 'em.

Yo Ed was just taking his morning shower when the shock rocked the Whyte House. He stepped on the shower curtain and pulled it loose from its moorings, along with a couple tons of plaster. He tried to collect from the earthquake insurance company, but was told that earthquake indemnity didn't cover clumsiness, or big feet.

Wanda Stanford down at Dewey Fix's, said the earthquake shook so hard that it moved the filling station out onto W. D.'s property and they had to spend the rest of the day getting it moved back.

Mrs. Scotty at the Electric Shop said the shock got Jasper the pet monkey so upset that he walked around upside down the rest of the day.

Earl Conner always spins a few yarns, and he said that the earthquake shook so hard that when one of the waitresses went to pour some cream out of a pitcher that it was full of butter, and when the gods went to reach for some eggs to fry for an order, they were already scrambled.

White Rose Spring Water Company

Nature, our greatest mother, always cares for her children. Her great breast provides the source from which comes the greatest substance of life. From springs, the fountainhead of every great river, comes this, the life-blood of the world—Water!

And water is the only commodity of the White Rose Spring Water Company, headed by Max M. Klass as president, which deals only in the water which has its inception 2,000 feet below its natural outlet, on the edge of a natural watershed, Mt. Washington, on Pasadena Avenue in the City of Los Angeles. From the top of this mighty geological fault seeps fluid which, through a great dyke, is brought to the surface 3,000 feet below its point of penetration.

Many who travel out Pasadena Way have seen the beautiful spring house snuggled among trees and rose bushes at the intersection of Pasadena Avenue Terrace and Pasadena Avenue, just opposite Sycamore Park.

The White Rose Spring has been flowing for commercial use since 1890, and was used by the Indians and Spanish before us as a rendezvous for gala day happenings and as an oasis and huntsman's paradise.

Max M. Klass came to California ten years ago, and at once saw the wonderful possibilities in this famed Spring, so purchased around 300 feet of land at this site, and today their holdings consist of this Spring and bottling house, also close by the Rose Apartments, a Class "A" building with 29 compartments, containing 59 rooms all told.

The Spring is housed by a concrete wall, which holds the natural temperature of this cool, deep Spring and protects it from air contamination.

White Rose Springs have a flow of 12,500 gallons of water each day, and this bubbling, healthful aqua pura is automatically bottled in sterilized containers holding five gallons, corked and capped for your protection, and daily this supply is delivered by 20 trucks painted the pure white, which identifies the trucks of "Quality Water." Each vehicle is originally designed, and contains receptacles of bottle-shaped contours, numbering in all 45 on each side. These cars also have space for many water stands and ollars. These ollars, by the way, keep the water 10 degrees cooler than the room in which it stands.

"White Rose Spring Water" is "Natural Spring Water," and the White Rose is its symbol of Purity.

Extract taken from pages 352 and 353, "Springs of California," Gerald J. Waring, published by Department of Interior.

A number of local natural waters are mentioned in the larger cities of the State for table use, as they are preferable to the municipal supplies. Several waters are distributed in Los Angeles, but most of them come from wells. A few of them are derived from springs, however, of which Rose Spring is one of the chief. In the early days of the city it formed a roadside watering place on the eastern outskirts, but it is now well within the city limits. The water issues from crevices in a sandstone bank beside one of the principal streams. It is piped a few yards to a house, in a building house, where a gallon and a half bottle are filled for the trade, and it has been on the local market since about 1900. Petition Has Been Tabled; No Action Now

Incorporationists Advised No Immediate Action Is Contemplated

When Mr. Ira Washburn inquired of Torrance City Council on Tuesday night last what the status of the incorporation petition was, he was informed by Mayor John Dennis that the petition had been tabled, and would probably not be taken from the table for reconsideration until and unless complainants withdrew their objections.

Mr. Washburn asked, if the complainants underwent a change of mind in the course of the next few weeks and no longer complained of incorporation into the limits of Torrance, if it would be necessary to file another petition. He was advised that it would not, since the old petition now on the table would serve the purpose.

Mayor Dennis explained that the next move necessarily must come from the petitioners themselves, and until that move was made the petition would remain on the table.
