WOMEN'S CLUB PLANS HUSBANDS' NIGHT

Further plans for Husbands' night, January 4th, were discussed. (Continued from Page 1) structure of a boys' village at Mooseheart. There are upwards of 2,000 children—orphans or dependents of deceased members of the Moose—being provided a home, a high school education and instruction in a trade in the child-city. The board of governors, headed by James J. Davis, United States Secretary of Labor, believes better training of the youngsters and better administration of child-city affairs can be brought about by building the boys' village, wherein boys of eight to twelve years will be lodged.

The plan calls for a total expenditure of $750,000, to construct the thirty buildings deemed necessary. The buildings will be of beautiful design, totally devoid of every institutional aspect and each supplying a home for twenty boys growing to intelligent and efficient manhood under the instruction of tactful and earnest leaders.

Mooseheart is a city complete in itself, with its own water and sanitary systems, its fire patrol, its excellently equipped hospital, its schools and workshops. The children range in age from tiny infants to young men and women of approximately eighteen—the age at which they usually graduate, equipped in heart, mind and hand to take up life's work. Physically Mooseheart is a vast park-like estate of more than 1,000 acres, from whose summer greenery or winter whiteness arise more than 150 cottages and other buildings constructed of granite-faced concrete with red tile roofs.

The child-city and the results it is obtaining in producing sterling men and women of tomorrow, is the source of wonderment among educators and social workers the world over. Its educational standard is of the highest and has been given a prominent place among schools of all sorts throughout the country.

The public is urged to extend its support to the charity ball on New Year's eve, not only for the enjoyment to be obtained, but to help further the good work that is its object.
