Just Around

The watchman at the Higgins Bros. deep test well on Palm street had his nose in a magazine when I drove in, and was taking his ease in a little board shack back of the rig. It was one of those days when the warm sunshine and the gentle breeze invites to rest and meditation.

The old pump on the rig was making a steady chug, chug, up and down, pulling the black gold out of the ground some 4000 feet down and spilling it into the tanks in a slow, leisurely way that seemed to say, "Well, I got all day to do this and I ain't goin' to hurry 'bout it. The oil's down there and if I keep this up long enough I'll get it all out mebbe. Ever' time I chug, chug along, I make money for the boss, and that's sompin that everybody can't say."

"Oh, well," says the watchman, "I been walking for six months now. 'T' would be no hurt to me to do a little mite more."

About 15 boys looking happy over at Walter Sharp's place, back of the Derrick Company on Carson street. Looking happy because they're working. Sharp's the man from Chula Vista that put in the produce packing plant down here last fall, and he's got it going again this spring, shipping out celery.

I watched the boys working a little while, and they didn't seem to mind padding in that cold water a bit. They all had on oil-cloth aprons, and such, to keep from getting their clothes wet. When one of them grabbed up a big two-foot knife and swung down on a celery stalk to trim off some roots, I turned around and walked out.

Some of the boys and girls around town are doing a little worrying just now, over a raw deal they think they got. Seems like they were invited to spend ten dollars for a membership in a mountain resort clubhouse, with a lake and a creek with fishing privileges, a whole lot of row-boats and all the other attractions that go with that sort of a proposition. Ten dollars a year was all it cost, so a lot of the boys and girls fell for the deal. Now the company wants to collect the other ninety dollars all in one lick, and the boys and girls are most of them kind of hard pressed to know where to raise such an amount. The company tells them that if they don't pay they will slap some kind of a law paper on them that will take away all their possessions down to the baby's rattle. So the boys and girls are sure worrying.

Officer Bill Mallin had to take out after a 20-month-old kid the other day, who had left his home, mother and playthings on a sudden impulse to see the world. Bill spied a kid that answered the description going south on a scooter bike, so he gave him the siren and waved him over to the curb. "I ain't done nothin'," says the kid, as he fell off the bike. "No, you ain't done nothin' yet," says Bill, "but just what was you aimin' to do, young feller?" "Well," says young Twenty Months, "I was goin' to San Pedro if you hadn't stopped me." "Going to get a job on a boat?" says Bill, sort of sarcastic. "Well, I was thinking I'd join the navy and see the world," he says. Bill has got kids of his own so he finally persuaded young Twenty Months that he was a little premature, and headed him for home.

Wood Article Inconsistent, Says Champion of Charter

In his article entitled, "The School Teachers and the Charter," Prof. Wood discusses several questions of importance. There are, however, at least two inconsistencies in his arguments, which will be discussed here along with the other questions.

Inconsistency No. 1
Prof. Wood contends that Boards of Education in smaller districts, which by inference includes Torrance, "are not usually content to leave the educational phases of the school system to the superintendent and teachers, but too often attempt to step into technical situations in which the members are not competent to act. The results are disastrous, with inefficiency . . . and dissatisfaction as a result."

The next inconsistency relates to his argument regarding the public mindedness of the "school people." The argument is made, in one breath, that the teachers are public minded, and that they are not considering their own "positions, without regard to the important matter of city government and general welfare of the community," and, in another breath, it is contended that if the charter is adopted and Torrance assumes the management of the local school 96% of the TEACHERS WILL ACCEPT TRANSFERS TO OTHER LOS ANGELES CITY SCHOOLS IN ORDER TO MAINTAIN THEIR WELL-EARNED TENURE OF POSITION AND SENIORITY IN SERVICE."

It is also contended that the history of smah districts is to combine rather than separate. This may be true to a certain extent but not advisable when the district becomes as large as Los Angeles. H. A. Payne, county auditor, in a recent article pointed out the overworked nature of metropolitan areas is all out of proportion to the increase of population. If this is true of counties it would be true of school districts.

The annual report of Los Angeles county for June 30, 1931, shows that there are 118 elementary districts, 26 high school districts and five junior college districts in Los Angeles county alone. This doesn't show an inclination to combine. The two recent combinations were purely economic and not educational. Huntington Park annexed to Los Angeles because it had thousands of pupils and a low assessed valuation and a high tax rate of $2.35. Laguna annexed to Montebello to get the benefit of a $1.24 tax rate.

will be that it is over-departmentalized. Whittier points out that the county furnishes these services also.

The California Commission for the Study of Education Problems sent out fifty thousand post cards to citizens engaged in all sorts of occupations and residing in all parts of the state in an effort to discover what are considered to be the three outstanding public school problems of California, and THE TEACHING OF FUNDAMENTALS was one of the problems most frequently mentioned in several thousand letters and cards. The following are some of the complaints from all over the state contained in the report of the above mentioned commission:

"Dear down harder on the fundamentals in the lower schools . . . Berkeley." "Reduce number of non-essential subjects taught in elementary and high schools and return to fundamentals . . . San Francisco." "Reduce curriculum to permit greater concentration . . . San Francisco." "Too many fads and a neglect of the fundamentals . . . Newman." "Give children a more thorough ground work in the three R's . . . San Francisco." "Too many studies and lack of thoroughness . . . Santa Barbara." "Less art and more three R's . . . Bakersfield." "Concentration more on essentials, less on frills . . . San Francisco." "The curriculum is too discursive. Many subjects are taught, but not thoroughly . . . San Francisco. Attorney." "The fundamentals of education are not being taught in California schools today" . . . from a city attorney.

well cared for, at low cost, and have been doing worthwhile work of great benefit to the state. Crime was reduced in direct proportion to the number of men sent to camp. Transients have been supported by the state releasing local relief funds for the relief of local residents. "Most important of all perhaps, in the fact that the thousands of men who have been in camp come out in the spring in good health and good spirits, physically and mentally fit for whatever paying jobs seasonal work affords."

DOLLAR DAYS PLANNED FOR APRIL 1st-2nd

The outstanding bargains of the year are promised next week by Torrance merchants when they hold their Dollar Days, Friday and Saturday, April 1 and 2.

For several weeks, local storekeepers have been preparing for this bargain festival, and the values offered will eclipse any previous co-operative event. Present conditions in retail trade are very advantageous for the offering of record-breaking low prices. Many local merchants are disregarding costs entirely in order to make the Dollar Days Event the banner affair of the year.

Next week's issue of the Torrance Herald will contain the complete lists of bargains to be offered on the Dollar Days, April 1 and 2.

Requests For Funds Denied By Chamber
A request from the Torrance Men's Bible Class for a $92 contribution from Chamber of Commerce funds in order to purchase supplies for a barbecue was denied by directors this week.
