

Baby Stars In Screen Hit At Torrance Soon

All star casts are not much of a novelty these days, but when no more than 13 of the most famous male players in picturedom are seen on the screen at one time, as in Amos 'n' Andy might say "dat's som'pin'."

CHESS

By A. L. PAUL

Regular weekly meetings of the Torrance Chess Club continue to be held every Monday and Friday evening from 7:00 to 11:00 o'clock at the Torrance Chamber of Commerce rooms.

We earnestly solicit comments and criticisms, as well as questions on chess regarding the features in this column.

The analysis of the writer's game played by mail with the British women's champion, Mrs. B. G. Hollis, continues.

15. R-K5 B-Q2 The object of white's move is the preparation for a well planned attack by boring deep into enemy territory.

16. Q-QN4 P-B4 This is an unsuccessful attempt on the part of black to free the game by giving back the P.

17. RXPB B-B3 A very weak attempt to inaugurate a counter attack on the white K position.

18. B-N5 QR-B Now white's attack on the black K begins.

19. R-Q N-Q4 White covers the only remaining space to which the K can move after the check. Black blocks this with the N, a clever move, but delayed too long for effectiveness.

20. R(15)XN PR White's sacrifice is sound since it deprives him of nothing in the mating combination, and it further reduces the last vestige of resistance in black's position.

21. RXP BxB Black has no other course available.

22. QxBch H-B3 23. R-Q Q-K3 Apparently black has successfully blocked the impending mate and has steered the game into a drawn-out ending.

24. B-N4 QB White guards the P at B3 and black guards the P at N2.

25. Q-K5ch Q-K3 Resigns White, of course, threatens mate by Q-Q3 and black, in order to defend it with B-N3.

An extraordinary feat, worthy of note, is the performance of a blind player who finished fourth in a recent British master tournament. He competed against such eminent talent as Sir George Wood, the present British men's champion.

G. F. asks for a full explanation of the move, "pawn capture en passant."

When the alternative of moving a pawn one or two squares on the first move was introduced into the game about 300 years ago, there automatically arose the evasion of its capture by an opponent's pawn on either adjacent file because the first player's pawn would thus pass the second player's pawn by moving to the fourth square.

There is considerable misunderstanding among amateur players regarding the legality of this move, as well as over its execution.

For one thing, the roasts is not to be "dressed" or covered. The use of a lid on the meat, says Mrs. Wright, causes "steaming" instead of roasting, and the result is much less tender.

Not all of the discoveries in beef cookery, however, concern the matter of dressing. Of even greater importance is the new knowledge that low temperatures (300° F.) are far more successful than the hot oven advocated by older cook books.

The Torrance Chess Club announces an exhibition of simultaneous play by the writer on Monday evening, October 8. Every chess player is urged to participate. Please bring your sets.

Western Meat Markets Launch Annual Drive On Quality Beef

That the cattle growers may be benefitted by having their surpluses reduced at a fair price and that the consumer may be able to secure high quality beef, Safeway and Piggly Wiggly markets are sponsoring the third annual organization-wide beef campaign, according to Clarence Dale, district market manager for the Los Angeles area.

With prospects of exceeding last year's effort, in which more than ten carloads of Western grown beef were moved from producer to consumer, the company has placed orders throughout the 11 western states for the finest cattle available.

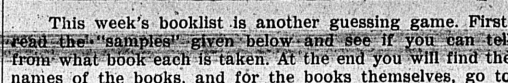

This year's campaign revolves around three points, Mr. Dale stated. First, there is a cattle surplus despite the enormous slaughtering under the government projects; second, the consumer is not aware that high quality beef is obtainable; third, Safeway and Piggly Wiggly wish to do their part in stabilizing the market for top quality beef by bringing the grower and consumer closer together.

Government statistics, Mr. Dale continued, show that after allowance has been made for the cattle already slaughtered, there are more than 65 million cattle in the United States, or more than eight million above the total for 1928 when the supply was ample to meet month time demands.

"In the face of many reports of cattle lost through thirst or starvation," Mr. Dale explained, "many people have naturally reached the conclusion that good beef is not obtainable. However, there are many fortunate stock growers whose herds have escaped the drought entirely and are in prime condition to make top quality beef."

Another fact that should be brought to the public's attention is that none of the meat from drought affected animals is offered for sale by retail markets. Government purchased meat is canned and labeled "Not to be Sold."

"The prosperity of the entire cattle industry, an important factor in the life of the West, depends, we believe, to a great extent upon the public's knowledge of the true situation. For that reason, the beef campaign this year is especially significant, and we feel that Safeway and Piggly Wiggly stores are in a position to render a public service through the benefits that will accrue to the stock grower as a result of this organization-wide drive on beef," says Dale.

READING FOR FUN

This week's booklist is another guessing game. First, read the "samples" given below and see if you can tell from what book each is taken.

1. Suddenly, there came a loud knocking at the door. The startled children ceased their romp and dared not move a limb. Then the big, wooden latch lifted of itself, with a loud creak; the door opened slowly; and in crept a little old woman, dressed all in green, with a red hood over her head. She was hump-backed and lame and had only one eye; her nose and chin almost touched; and she walked leaning on a stick. She was obviously a fairy.

2. Chi-Wee took her shawl in her hand and crept as carefully as she could toward the little animal. It saw her coming and went jumping away through the sage, the wee bit of tail looking very comical as it went up and down up and down with every jump.

3. To have come all this way, and faced so many dangers, and yet to find no water-babies! How hard!

4. Toby Tyler by Kaler.

5. The fair put on her big round glasses and looked at the big...

6. Chi-Wee wished he did not have to be made into stew; but then she would think of her mother and run all the faster for the thought.

7. Mr. Linch has put in lots of time and money to make his used car lot second to none, not only in appearance, but by handling one of the most complete lines of re-conditioned cars to be found anywhere.

8. Mr. Linch stated emphatically that all of his used cars are local cars traded in on Dodge and Plymouths and not driven in from other states.

9. "Do you belong to the circus?" "Yes," said Toby, a little doubtfully.

10. Then the boys stared at him again as if he were one of those strange-looking animals, and the one who had been the spokesman drew a long breath of envy as he said, longingly, "My! what a nice time you must have!"

11. Toby remembered that only yesterday he himself had thought that boys must have a nice time with a circus.

12. "And do they give you frogs to eat, so's to make you limber?"

13. Children's Bluebird by Maeterlinck.

14. Chi-Wee by Moon.

15. Water-babies by Kingsley.

Handy Andy

Will Rogers plays a hilarious role as a druggist on a holiday in "Handy Andy," coming to the Lomita Theatre tomorrow and Saturday, October 5 and 6.

ROAST BEEF GOES NUDIST

This rather surprising fact is brought out in a recent bulletin on beef cookery prepared by the Home-makers Bureau of Safeway Stores.

For one thing, the roasts is not to be "dressed" or covered. The use of a lid on the meat, says Mrs. Wright, causes "steaming" instead of roasting, and the result is much less tender.
