Summer Sausage Corn Fritters

So often the hostess thinks of ready-to-serve meats only in terms of cold meat platters or cold sandwiches, and fails to realize that these same ready-to-serve meats can be made into unusually appetizing hot dishes with very little effort and on a moment's notice.

- Sausage and Corn Fritters
1 cup summer sausage, chopped
1 small can whole-kernel corn
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
2 eggs
Salt

Chop sausage finely. Drain the corn and add the dry ingredients which have been sifted together. Add the sausage and beaten egg yolks. Mix thoroughly. Fold in stiffly beaten egg whites and drop by the spoonful into hot lard. Let fry until a golden brown and serve immediately.

NON-PROFIT CHAIN LETTER CIRCULATES AT HARVARD

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (U.P.)—Harvard students have started a new chain letter—non-profit making.

The holder of a letter asks a friend for a nickel for a telephone call. In exchange for the nickel a letter is given reading: "This nickel will be used to transport mules from Jerusalem. Don't be a jackass and ask for your nickel back. Get yours like I got mine."

News From Washington

By Your Congressman CHARLES J. GOLDEN

If Hitler had fired a shot at the capitol dome it would not have created much more consternation than did the bomb that was dropped into the New Deal by the supreme court. Congress was stunned and a gloom like a funeral pall hangs over the capitol. It reminded me of a heavy fog between Gardena and Harbor City on a bad night when my campaign was out of kilter and going haywire.

At no time since I have been in Washington, not even in the days of the bank panic, have I sensed such pessimism and disheartenment as we are now undergoing. Everybody is asking, like General Hugh Johnson in his speech, "Where do we go from here?"

All the big shots are running from one huddle to another trying to discover a way out. Some opinions are being whispered and others are being shouted from the house tops. It depends whether you are for the New Deal or whether you are against it.

Some of the members are now saying, "Thank heaven for the constitution." When we passed the N. R. A. and it became a law, I said: "Thank heaven, we have ended child labor and we are giving the worker a chance to speak in behalf of his wages, his hours, and the conditions under which he labors." Now, the supreme court tells me that I am all wrong and that congress had no right to regulate hours and wages and to interfere with the exploitation of women and children in the sweatshops of this nation.

Technically and also based upon the precedents of the past, the supreme court may be right from the standpoint of property rights, but regardless of the decision, I feel that the time has come in this country when we must do something for social justice and economic reform. I see a new era and a new era and the New Deal was its forerunner—the herald leading the way. In my mind it was but a beginning. Of course I am disappointed. Now we must back up and start out anew, for there is no doubt that the supreme court decision has stopped our forward march and our plans must be revised and our work must all be done again.

to the little fellow to get his. Furthermore, many of the codes were formed voluntarily. The whole idea was accepted with enthusiasm and started with a bang. It was soon discovered that it was impractical to apply such a scheme to the barber, the beauty shop, the plumber, the presser and the printer, and hundreds of other small enterprises, and upon these the burden of the N. R. A. was a heavy load.

It appears to me now that it would have been better to have attempted to regulate the big corporations doing an interstate business and left the smaller business entirely to the state in which it operates. Regardless of what the supreme court has to say, it was just too big a job for the government to handle. General Hugh Johnson is probably as capable and as fearless as any man in America, and while he evidently believed in the principles, he gave the job up in disgust and matters have been going from bad to worse since his administration.

The supreme court has knocked over three of the important measures for social and economic justice. It declared as unconstitutional: First—The Railway Pension Bill. Second—The N.R.A. Third—The Farm Moratorium Act.

All three of these measures were based upon the general welfare clause of the constitution, and while the expansion of the general welfare provision has been securing a firmer place in supreme court decisions, the last two decisions did not find one judge among the nine to defend it. With the four great liberal and progressive judges against us we'll have to admit we're sunk for a time at least. But many a fellow who has been kicked overboard has been able to swim ashore and President Roosevelt is said to be a good swimmer. He can also throw a mean hook and line. Maybe he and his associates may save something from the wreck. Let's hope so. For the first time in his career as President his program is shattered, his prestige shaken and his future beclouded. The Democratic donkey is somewhat dazed and many Democratic

MISS SPOON suddenly stricken BY ILLNESS

Miss Mary E. Spoon, 2271 Torrance boulevard, is seriously ill at her home, and fears for her recovery are entertained, as the result of a stroke which Miss Spoon suffered Tuesday morning. The lady had gone to Los Angeles on business and was being taken in an elevator to an upper floor of the P. E. building when she was stricken. She was brought home, and while conscious for several hours later lapsed into a coma.

Miss Spoon, although advanced in years, has been very active and had not complained of illness prior to the sudden attack. She is well known in the city where she has resided for a number of years and her many friends deeply regret to know of her serious illness.

An opportune hour for the court to ask this Congress for a ten-million dollar building, one of the finest that the world affords.
