

New Association Formed to Boost Sepulveda Blvd.

Completion of Links South to Seal Beach Urged As Necessity

As result of the plans for celebrating the final paving of Sepulveda boulevard from Ventura boulevard to Washington boulevard, the group which assembled at a meeting in West Los Angeles recently decided to create a new association to be known as "Sepulveda Completion Association". This is found necessary, due to the fact that there are certain sections from Washington boulevard to Seal Beach that are not finished.

The instructions given the officials of this new association were to ascertain the alignment of Sepulveda boulevard as made by the state highway department and the city and county departments, and the necessary action then be taken to secure the paving of this important artery for the balance of the unfinished sections.

The group selected Mr. Loren Howe as the president of this new association.

Town Trough to Go

CHARDON, Ohio. (U.P.)—After standing nearly a century, one of this village's oldest landmarks will be removed. The landmark is a stone watering trough. The small spring which once fed the trough dried up years ago and it has not been used since.

Human 'Death Test' Vetoed

Stephen Sinkovitch, 24-year-old author and playwright, who volunteered to allow Dr. Ralph Willard, Hollywood scientist, to perform an operation on him known as "freezing death." However, authorities vetoed the idea after Sinkovitch signed papers absolving the doctor of all responsibility. The author is signing the papers with Dr. Willard, on his right, surrounded by attorneys and Willard's assistants.

Mail Carrier Goes On Hunting Trip

Otis Pederson and Merle Gasser, Lomita nimrods, left this week on a hunting trip, and hope to be the first to bring in a cargo of venison when the deer season opens today. Miss Enid Bunge, assistant postmaster at Lomita, was given the duty of handling the rural route service due to Pederson's absence and her place in the office is taken by Mrs. Ada Anderson.

Court Provides Coats

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (U.P.)—Judge L. D. Miller keeps a supply of old coats in his court room during hot weather. The coats are for lawyers who come to court in their shirt sleeves forgetting an old regulation which requires lawyers and court officers to wear coats.

Sparrow Shares Mailbox

DAMARISCOTTA, Me. (U.P.)—Joe Chapman's mailbox serves a dual purpose. A sparrow established quarters in it and laid some eggs. The letter carrier opens the box to deposit mail and the mother bird doesn't object.

News From Washington

By Your Congressman
CHARLES J. GOLDEN

Although the first session of the 74th Congress is now entering its eighth month, and the members are almost unanimously in favor of cleaning up and going home, it is difficult to determine the time of adjournment. Much of the important legislation is still hanging fire and in the hands of the conference committees which are endeavoring to adjust the differences between the House and the Senate.

The T. V. A. bill finally made the grade in about as clean cut shape as any of the important bills. After the Senate passed the T. V. A. bill, it was handed over to the House committee on military affairs, but when it reached the floor of the House it was put back in original form and finally got through in good shape.

The holding company bill that passed the Senate largely as Senator Wheeler introduced it, was badly butchered in the House and is having a hard struggle and may be lost due to the bitter contest that now engulfs it.

The social security bill, that passed the House in fairly good shape, has been badly mangled up in the Senate and the conferees are having a hard time to adjust the differences between the House and the Senate, both of which are determined to have their own way. The banking bill, was passed by the House along the line of the administration recommendations, but when this important measure got over to the Senate, it was mangled and amended until it lost much of its vitality and usefulness. It is now in the hands of the conference committee, with the House conferees battling for its original provisions and the Senate conferees just as strongly determined that it shall emerge according to the wishes of the senators.

A very unusual situation arose in the struggle between the House conferees and the Senate conferees on the bill to control the holding utility companies. The House and Senate are each represented by five members. Three of the House conferees refused to hold a session with the Senate conferees unless the attorney, Ben Cohen, who wrote the bill, was locked outside. It has always been customary that either the Senate or the House conferees had the right to call in such experts as they needed when considering a bill. Two of the House conferees were agreeable to the wishes of the Senate conferees to have an expert present, but the other House conferees, one a Democrat and two Republicans, refused to yield. This is an unprecedented situation and discloses the bitterness of the battle between the administration and the holding company lobby.

Walter Chandler, Democratic congressman from Memphis, Tennessee, was one of the members who withstood the bombardment of the holding companies' lobby. He has used the table in his office as an exhibit and has classified all of his letters and telegrams. He received over 6,000 letters and nearly 3,000 telegrams. Over 100 of the letters were written on the same kind of paper and on the same typewriter, although signed by different names. He also received 53 telegrams from one of the 10-cent stores of Memphis, all signed by the clerks, the counter girls and the staff of the store.

The bitter contest over the bill to regulate holding companies has brought out some of the best oratory to which the House has had an opportunity to listen. Sam Rayburn of Texas is the leader for the bill and George Huddleston of Alabama is its most vigilant opponent. These men have been friends on the committee for many years, but when they loosen in debate they made into each other with glittering phrases and sharpened sarcasm. When Mr. Rayburn offered a resolution requesting the House to approve the "death sentence," which is a misnomer, he made an unusually able speech. Huddleston, in his reply, smote his friend with sarcasm, by saying that his colleague had been a fighter all his life, but in this crisis he was sentimental and yielding and had lost his militant spirit. While both of these gentlemen were sincere and vigorous and courteous, they dealt each other some heavy verbal blows and for once the House members were quiet in rapt attention.

The Federal banking bill provided a Federal Reserve board of seven members, but the Senate raised this number to 12—five of which are to be bankers. This renews the old battle of the first Federal Reserve banking bill, in which President Wilson insisted and succeeded in eliminating bankers from the Federal Reserve board. President Wilson took the position that you just as well turn the Interstate Commerce Commission over to the president of the railroads as to permit the bankers to dominate the Federal Reserve system. The House conferees are violently opposed to this provision inserted by the Senate and the Senate conferees, of which Senator Glass is the accepted leader, is just as determined that the bankers shall be represented on the Federal Reserve board.

The Senate displayed unusual speed in passing the omnibus bank bill in two and one-half days. The House also has used the spurs and passed the administration tax measure after three days of discussion. The House convened at 10 a. m. and was in session approximately eight hours per day. I slipped over to the office one day to read my mail and give the office staff a chance to get out on time and had three calls to return within a few minutes. I thought my absence for a short time would not be noticed but I was mistaken.

Hon. J. J. Boyle, assemblyman from the 66th district, with his wife and two sons were recent Washington visitors. Also Captain L. L. McClary, one-time police captain at San Pedro, with his wife and daughter, were taking in the capital sights.

YOU DON'T HAVE TO "BREAK IN" THE FORD V-8

You can drive it 50 miles an hour the day you buy it

The Ford V-8 is ready for normal driving when you buy it. There is no tedious period of breaking-in for 500 or 1000 miles. You can drive it up to 50 miles an hour the first day. And after the first hundred miles you can drive it as fast as you desire.

That means greater motoring enjoyment for every motorist. It is especially important to motorists who are thinking about a new car for a vacation trip—to physicians, salesmen and all those who use a car for business. Instead of dragging along at slow speeds for days, you can make good time from the start.

The reason for this is as important as the result. The Ford V-8 needs no breaking-in because of unusual accuracy in the manufacture of moving parts and the smoothness of bearing surfaces. Clearances are correct when you buy the car. It is not necessary to depend on a long wearing-in period to eliminate tightness and insure smooth running. Longer life, greater economy and better performance are bound to result from such precision methods. The Ford V-8 gives you fine-car construction, along with fine-car performance, comfort, safety and beauty.
