Dress Children In Gay Colors For Safety

Drab Clothing Makes Youngsters Hardly Noticeable to Motorists

Dress children in bright-colored outer garments in winter time for their own safety, says the bureau of home economics of the United States department of agriculture. While children should not play in city thoroughfares or even on country highways, because of automobiles, there are occasions when they have to cross streets or when they try to retrieve balls or other playthings from the path of traffic. They must be further protected by dressing them in bright, conspicuous colors which motorists can see from a distance.

Last winter, the bureau says, there was a swing away from the vivid red, blue, green, or orange once popular for children's clothes. Children were dressed in brown, navy blue, gray, olive drab, or dull maroon, hardly noticeable to the passing driver.

Many mothers in summer time dress children in bright bathing suits for the sake of visibility. The same idea can be applied to winter garments.

Children like to wear gay colors. Those of nursery-school age choose them by preference. Those a little older are governed to some extent by what others wear, so it may be necessary for mothers to get together and "create" a vogue for vivid colors in outer garments. If stores do not carry the desired shades in ready-made wear, practical one-piece play suits in colors preferred for safety are easily made.

Several pattern companies show designs that are warm and comfortable and not difficult for the home seamstress. Some have sliding metal fasteners down the front; others large buttons. Nearly all styles have knitted wristlets and anklets to keep out wind.

Torture Platform Proves Stamina Of New Dodge

The machine shown here, called the "Belgian Roll," is a laboratory contrivance on which every strain or abuse to which an automobile could possibly be subjected in years of severe service is infinitely multiplied, and inflicted on a 1936 Dodge sedan.

New Dodge Cars Given Hard Test, Says Walter Linch

"Torture platform," "punishment pit," "the rack"—are some of the names which visitors to the Dodge testing laboratory bestow on the contrivance pictured here, after watching its operation.

The company's engineers, some of them no doubt harboring memories of European roads over which they cowered during the World War, call it the "Belgian Roll."

The Belgian Roll, according to Walter G. Linch, Redondo Beach Dodge and Plymouth dealer, is an instrument of fiendish mechanical cruelty, so premeditated that many an onlooker wonders whether human compassion for all things might not have reached the heights of a "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Automobiles."

The truth is, however, that the Belgian Roll serves a distinctly humanitarian function. The first and final purpose of the machine is to further the cause of motoring safety and dependability by subjecting Dodge cars to machine-made wear and tear of such fearful concentration that a single day's Belgian Roll treatment is the equivalent of several years of the most strenuous actual service that could be imagined.

Every strain and jolt which a car could possibly be made to suffer, every jar, every twist which might, conceivably be inflicted on an automobile mechanism in hundreds of thousands of miles of travel of unheard-of severity, is visited, with infinite multiplication, on Dodge cars, so as to afford designers, engineers, metallurgists and manufacturing experts opportunities to verify earlier calculations and specifications long before the production of a new model series is undertaken.

Fortunately for the interests of safety, the work of the Belgian Roll is ruthless and thorough, missing no flaw, no weakness such as in service might remain hidden for years, perhaps even permanently.

Inflicts Terrible Punishment
The testing machine itself has been designed with evident circumspection so that it inflicts not a more or less regularly recurring set of impacts, twists and wrenchings, but a carefully determined variety of destructive forces, many of them meeting one another so as to induce the most telling effects on the chassis, body, springs, wheels and other parts of the car.

Though the test car is quite evidently anchored to the Belgian Roll, few visitors venture very close to it, speculation as to what might happen—"if" being their natural reaction.

Plays Entertain Boys in Camp

With Harry O'Neal, senior foreman, pinch-hitting for Captain Leon A. Whittier as operator, four reels of Olympic Games pictures were shown at all-camp night, Tuesday, November 19, at the Palos Verdes Camp, Co. 2520, C. C. C., located in the foothills south of Lomita.

Official fire regulations were read by Lieut. McMillan and "Dean" France gave a talk on "How to Obtain a Job."

Three plays were given following the talks. The first play was "A Minor Operation," with Almer Kelsey and Ray Sherman in the cast. The second play, "The Hillbilly," had Joe Logan and Ray Sherman in the cast. The third play, "Money Talks," had in its cast Andy Yakubov, P. J. Loney, Almer Kelsey and Ray Sherman. Those helping with the properties were Carbine Bagley and Lawrence Moore. Jack Patterson and James Benner played and sang during the intermission.

The winners in the pie-eating contest were: Roth in 1:15, Karimol in 1:25, and Glaros in 1:40.
