Vitriolic Editor's Writings Kept Him In Trouble

By C. B. ROBERTSON

Among the early day writers of this country none was more venomous and vitriolic than William Corbett, of Philadelphia. Corbett was born in England in 1762. He was the self-educated son of a farmer, and in early manhood was eight years in the army, rising to the rank of sergeant-major. He obtained his discharge in 1791, married and came to America in 1792, when he became a pamphleteer, book-seller and journalist, having established Peter Porcupine's Gazette in 1794.

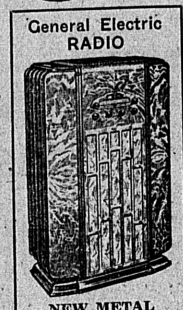

He attacked the famous Dr. Benjamin Rush, of Philadelphia, because of his treatment of yellow fever cases, especially of his blood letting. Rush prosecuted him for libel and obtained a verdict for $5,000 damages. That suit was brought to trial on December 14, 1799, the day that George Washington died, and Corbett remarked that it was a singular coincidence that while the great patriot was dying in consequence of the too free use of the lancet, he should be mulcted in a verdict of $5,000 for exposing and ridiculing the dangerous practice in treating yellow fever.

In anticipation of the verdict, Corbett stopped the publication of his paper and moved to New York where he was threatened with imprisonment but procured bail. There he issued a series of vigorous pamphlets, called Rush Lights, in which he exhibited in vivid colors the various phases of character of all engaged in his prosecution. He went back to England and issued Porcupine's Works in 12 octavo volumes, which had a large sale on both sides of the Atlantic. In these were exhibited such pictures of his American Lomita Post Office Open Saturday P.M.

Christmas shoppers in Lomita have been shopping early and mailing their out-of-town gifts promptly, according to the records kept at the postoffice in that city. Already, last Tuesday, the number of sacks of parcel post shipped from Lomita, had exceeded the total number sent out last year by 20 sacks. With Christmas still four mailing days away, the all-time record for holiday mail will be broken. For the accommodation of patrons, the postoffice will remain open next Saturday afternoon until 6 o'clock. Four extra helpers have been added to the staff to take care of the rush.
