Cooky's Club Cafe Opens

New Restaurant And Cocktail Room On Post Avenue Is Opened Today By Morris G. Koch

To Torrance and vicinity the Koch family needs no introduction. Jack Koch owns and operates the Star Department Store. Joe Koch only recently sold his shoe store and now is about town with other business ideas up his sleeve. Sol Koch owns the Mayfair Apartments, the Park Hotel, and for something to do on the side is opening a paint store in the Park Hotel building at Sartori and Post.

Now comes the youngest of the boys, Morris G. Koch, former manager of the Star Department Store, with a brand new, shiny, first class restaurant and cocktail bar at 1809 Post, across from the Star. For the sake of simplicity Morris has changed his name to Cooky and the new establishment will be known as Cooky's Club Cafe and Cocktail Room.

Opens Today
The grand opening is scheduled for today, and by the time this comes off the press, Morris, with the aid of his wife Eva, who will act as hostess and manager of the dining room, will have served many meals. Unfortunately, no liquor can be served until the State Board of Equalization grants Morris a license, which will be in a few days.

Experienced Chef
Coming to Cooky's with a mile-long recommendation is Paul Roestel, culinary expert par excellence, and for many years head chef at the Knickerbocker and Waldorf Astoria hotels in New York City. There he served many celebrities such as General Pershing, Caruso, ex-President Taft, Diamond Jim Brady and many others.

During the war Roestel was in Washington, D. C., as a food expert and had over 65 cooks under him. His last place of employment was the Log Cabin Park cafe and night club in Oklahoma City. Roestel now lives at the Mayfair apartments with Mrs. Roestel.

Bartender Skilled
Amplified with only the finest liquors will be Charles Wettengel, late of the Sea Gull Cafe of Redondo Beach, who will mix 'em according to all the rules. However, he has an extra amount of skill necessary to stir up any fancy drink that even the most particular customer might order. Charlie, it is rumored, is noted for his Singapore Slings (don't crowd, boys!).

Already hired as waitress is red-haired, smiling Dorothy Reddington, well known in Torrance. She promises super-service.

Over $6000 Invested
Over $6000 in fixtures and equipment has been installed in the new cafe. Everything is brand new, the walls are paneled in mahogany and the bar is modernistic. Complete new equipment has been put into the kitchen, including pots, dishes, silver, etc.

Prices Reasonable
Breakfasts, lunches and dinners will be served. Lunches will be 25c, 35c and 45c, while a full course dinner will cost only 50c, 65c and 85c.

Morris has added to his cafe a much needed banquet room next door and will be able to serve private parties, both for luncheons and dinners.

"We have spent a great deal of money to provide Torrance with a first class restaurant and cocktail room," said Morris Koch yesterday. "We have spared no effort and we are sure that the people of this area will find Cooky's Cafe the finest dining and dining establishment in the entire South Bay industrial district. I invite you all, personally, to visit us and try our food, our service, and our bar. We are sure to please you."

Planes to Hunt Redfern Wreck

BERKELEY, Calif. (U.P.)—Convinced that he can find the wreckage of the monoplane of Paul Redfern, who disappeared in a non-stop flight from Brunswick, Ga., to Rio de Janeiro, Aug. 25, 1927, Lee R. Dennison, 51-year-old South American mining man, has announced that within the next 90 days he will start an expedition of two planes and a crew to attain this objective.

According to Dennison, the flight will be made into the jungle fastnesses of the Grand Savannah country, 350 miles inland from the Venezuelan coast.

The trip, he is convinced, will end forever the fantastic tales that have come out of the South American hinterland to the effect that the Indians, watching young Redfern plummet out of the sky, venerated him as a white deity, nursed his injuries and installed him as a captive medicine man king.

Convinced Flier Is Dead
Dennison's conviction that Redfern is dead but that the wreckage of his monoplane can still be found is based on a rumor brought him by an Indian courier of Venezuela that he knew the precise spot where the wreckage lies.

Redfern, flying his silver and gold monoplane, "Port of Brunswick," planned to pick-up the South American coast at the Island of Trinidad off Venezuela, head south to the mouth of the Amazon in Brazil and then fly 1,600 miles overland to Rio.

Dennison believes Redfern may have mistaken the Orinoco delta in Venezuela for the Amazon, headed inland and crashed in the brush-choked FAYNES where his gasoline gave out.

"I have flown over this country a great deal in the past year," Dennison said. "And after 11 years in that territory am convinced no Indian tribe down there would have occasion to harbor him. Existence is too tough for everyone at all times."

Tells of First Clue
Dennison's first clue as to the possible whereabouts of the wreckage of Redfern's plane came following a perilous 36-day trip by canoe from his mining headquarters of Paviche, near the headwaters of the Caroni river, on an exploratory voyage into the primeval Grand Savannah country.

Dennison explains that with two bearers he was at Carrao Falls, in the heart of the Great Savannah country, when he was bitten by a deadly viper. While he was recovering, as was one of his bearers, another Indian came to them with the story that he had seen the tattered wreckage of Redfern's plane, hanging from a tree.

The Indian told Dennison that the exact spot was at a village eight or 10 days' journey to the west in the Yauyalingtopu Mountains near the Brazilian border. He promised to have a man who knew the exact spot at Carrao Falls on Dennison's return.

The particular area which Dennison will scout is about 700 miles to the northeast of where Redfern has been previously reported as having been forced down.

200-Ton Seaplane Planned
LONDON. (U.P.)—A giant seaplane, to weigh 200 tons, is likely to be built shortly for the British air force. Air ministry experts have found that such a craft is practicable and plans for construction are under consideration.
