Pianist-Teacher Opens Fall Season

With the opening of school, parents are thinking of the advantages of musical training for their children and making inquiries regarding the study of music. More than ever are young and old wanting to learn to play the piano, and this is not strange when one considers the many advantages of being able to play and play well. Adults who may have been deprived of early musical training are finding that it is possible to derive great enjoyment and pleasure from the study of the piano, and with increased leisure on their hands find the study of music filling a great need.

Great educators and authorities everywhere claim that the piano is one of the most beneficial of studies, and in every instance the child or adult who learns to play acquires more than musical skill. Personal magnetism, mental alertness and artistic appreciation are a few of the advantages to be derived from the study of music. As a means of self-expression, the development of self-confidence, leadership and character, as well as a means of encouraging good companionship, nothing compares to the ability to play an instrument, and to play the piano opens the door to many opportunities in the business and social world. Attractive materials and modern ways of teaching make learning to play delightful and speedy advancement follows.

Kathryne Buffington has been teaching in Torrance for over five years and has produced many successful students. Each month a studio recital is held, which gives students the advantage of playing before others, and thus develops poise and composure. Mrs. Buffington's high school students may receive high school credit for work taken in piano. All students from the youngest age four to the most advanced student receive a well-rounded training in music—harmony, ear-training, music appreciation and history in connection with the study of piano. The studio is located at 1548 Post avenue, phone Torrance 388.
