ASK FOR THESE BOOKS AT THE LIBRARY

Mountain and the Plain: by Herbert Gorham.—Here is one of the most exciting historical novels in years; full bodied and panoramic in its scope. Fortified by most careful and wide spread research this novel quietly and without sentimental hysteria tells the truth, and beards the fallacies which have crept into our histories. The theme is the emergence of the Common Man as a political entity; the birth throes of democracy conceived in bloody Revolution 1789 to 1793.

In the story you will meet a host of familiar characters, many of them cast in a new light and all portrayed with dramatic artistry. The threads of countless personal ambitions are woven into the pattern of a large story and are seen through the eyes of a young American who becomes involved both romantically and politically in the great upheaval of the French Revolution.

I Am the Fox: by Winifred Eiten.—The Atlantic Monthly's $10,000 prize went this year to a first novel. This is the story of Selma Temple, 26, red haired, whose childhood and youth in Iowa had left such impressions upon her mind that she was secretly afraid of life. When the story opens she is employed in New York as secretary to a man who loves her and wishes to marry her. They happen to see a fox hunted to death. Gardner Heath sees only the excitement of the sport, but Selma sees herself as the fox. The reader is taken back to Selma's past and encounters one by one those episodes which, lacking sense and kindly interpretation, have left such scars upon her mind.

The reader who will be interested in "The African Witch," by Joyce Carey, is he who likes stories of mysterious magical practices and witchcraft. Elizabeth, who is the main character, exercises a mysterious control over the child-like people around her. The tale takes us among the Negroes and the white officials of a British colony on the river Niger. We see a many-sided colony of white people, living on the rim of a volcano seething with Black Magic, older than any western civilization, quite unaware of the true nature of their surroundings. A study of conflict between reason and instinct, between enlightened folk ways and the ancient powers of darkness, the story has excitement all the way; the people are vividly alive and the whole works to a fine climax.

Down Came the Trees, by Anthony Thorne.—Thorne has the true novelist's triple qualification—he can write, he can tell a story, and he is always interesting. Those who read his delightful "Delay In the Sun" will look forward to this story which is of Liza, an Italian stenographer, and the Albanian peasant whom she loved, set against the background of glittering post-war Kraynik.

Lomita Elementary P.T.A. to Mark 25th Birthday

The Lomita elementary school P. T. A. will observe the 25th anniversary of the organization on Monday, Jan. 25, with a party to commemorate a quarter-century of service to the community.

The unit was founded when the school system in Lomita, as elsewhere, was far from the development it enjoys today. Mrs. Gertrude Boyle is president of the group this year.

It was announced that the oyster dinner, planned by the Fathers' Forum for last Friday night, has been postponed until tomorrow (Friday) night in the Community hall from 6 to 7 o'clock.
