MOTOR VEHICLES

During 1936, the total number of persons killed or injured in automobile accidents was greater than the combined casualties suffered by the American army during the World war. This serious situation has not gone unheeded by our lawmakers.
In an effort to discourage the reckless use of the automobile, and also to provide some means of redress for the innocent victim, the OWNER of a motor vehicle is held responsible for damage which has been caused by the manner of operation of that vehicle—even though the owner had no part in the operation of the car.

To hold the owner liable for damage done while some person other than the owner was operating the vehicle, the plaintiff must show:

1. Driver's Responsibility: If the driver was not responsible for the collision, then the owner of the car may not be held.
Thus, if both driver and owner are sued, and the driver is exonerated, there can be no verdict against the owner, alone.

2. Ownership of Car or Truck: Certificates of registration or ownership may be offered to prove that defendant owns the car. The fact that insurance on the car is carried in defendant's name is also strong evidence of ownership.

However, to be liable, the owner must be more than the mere holder of legal title under a conditional sales contract.
If the establishment that the driver was responsible for the collision, and that the defendant is the owner of the car, plaintiff must then show either of the following situations, to recover:

(a) That the car at the time of the collision was being used in the owner's business. Here, important questions arise as to whether the driver of the car (usually an employee) was still transacting his master's business at the time complained of—or whether the driver was then engaged on a mission of his own. A clear case of agency or employment must be made out to hold the owner under this section.

(b) The owner may also be liable if it can be shown that the driver of the car was incompetent and unfit to operate a car, and that the owner knew or should have known said driver was incompetent.

The fact that the driver was unlicensed is enough to make out a prima facie case against the owner under this theory. If the driver was drunk at the time the owner allowed him to borrow the car, or if the owner knew the driver was a reckless driver, a clear case is made out against the owner.

(c) In addition to the two theories above, in California the owner may be held responsible under a special statute which imposes absolute liability if it can be shown that:

1. Defendant owned the car;
2. That the driver caused the collision;
3. That the owner consented, expressly or impliedly, to the driver's operation of said car.
Whether or not the car was being used with the consent of the owner is a question of fact.
Evidence as to prior usage of the car by this driver is important. Under the statute, if the plaintiff shows a third person to use the car, the owner is still liable.

The statute limits the liability of the owner in this situation to a maximum of $5,000 to any one victim, or $10,000 to any one accident; and to $1,000 for property damage.
