Halliburton's Life Story...

is Halliburton contented to stay in America, so in 1926 he departed for Central and South America, adventuring along the historic trails of Balboa and Pizarro.

Lived a la Crusoe
Among his South American adventures was a 70 foot dive into the sacrificial Well of Death at the ruined city of Chichen Itza in Yucatan. Then, by arrangement with the government he swam the Panama Canal.

With his father he climbed the volcano in Mexico, Popocatepetl, though the elder man did not get to the top. In Peru he climbed the Andes. In Buenos Aires he bought a monkey and a hand-organ and with these accessories he made his way overland 2,000 miles to Rio.

On his way back he spent several weeks visiting the horrible French prison at Devil's Island and in this account, we find a serious and sorrowful Halliburton. Then he went to Robinson Crusoe's island and stayed 29 days, living the primitive life of Defoe's hero, with a Man Woodside, a parrot, goats, and everything. His third book, "New Worlds to Conquer," tells the fascinating story of the above mentioned trip.

Explores Merrimac Hulk
In 1932 his fourth book, "The Flying Carpet," was published. It took its name from the airplane in which Halliburton and his pilot-companion, Moya Stephens, Jr., follow a royal road to romance in the air. Timbuctoo was their first goal, chiefly because the name sounded far away and mysterious. Starting from California they reached this almost-mythical objective by flying 2,000 miles across the Sahara. From Timbuctoo they flew back north and spent two months with the French Foreign Legion in Morocco, and lived the life of the Legionnaires, learning at first hand the truth about this heroic and disreputable army.

From Morocco, the Flying Carpet carried them on through Europe to Constantinople, next to Arabia and Bagdad and then to Persia. While in Borneo the Dyak head-hunters presented Halliburton with a dozen human heads, a token of appreciation from the chief of the village, who by encouragement of rice wine, dared to ride aboard the Flying Carpet.

After a year of lecturing around the country, Halliburton started out on another adventure which began in the summer of 1934. His first stop was at Fort Jefferson, off the southern tip of Florida, where Dr. Mudd, the physician who had set the broken leg of John Wilkes Booth after the murder of Lincoln, had been imprisoned. He sailed around the harbor of Santiago de Cuba, and retold the thrilling story of Hobson's famous exploit in the Spanish-American War, and went down to explore the sunken hulk of the immortal Merrimac. By air he visited the beach in the Bahamas where Columbus first landed in America, and at Santo Domingo the burial casket and the bones themselves, of the Great Discoverer.

This trip covered a personal interview with Haile Selassie; the bedside confession of one of the chief executioners who had carried out the massacre of Tsar Nicholas II and the six members of his family; a visit to the Monastery in Mt. Athos—where "No Woman's Land" in northern Greece where no woman, female animal or fowl has set foot for a thousand years; an interview with the Ibn Saud, giant King of Arabia and other numerous exciting trips. Perhaps one of the most unique and sensational was his trip across the Alps a la Hannibal, when Halliburton rode an elephant through the 8,000-foot Great St. Bernard pass, just because he thought it would be amusing!

When he came back to America, he wrote his fifth book and called it "Seven League Boots." Needless to say, Halliburton, who seems incapable of writing a dull page, reports each of his adventures with the same contagious zest, the same charm and swing and dash, that have won such unrivaled popularity for his other tales.

The broad smiles which enlighten the faces of these two service club presidents, pictured right to left, are prompted by the assured success of the joint Kiwanis-Rotary dinner dance tonight. Already 150 reservations have been made at the Palos Verdes Golf clubhouse for the clubs' members and ladies. Dinner will be served at 7 p. m. and an eight-piece orchestra will furnish music for dancing between courses and after dinner. There will be singing and a number of specialty entertainment numbers have been planned, according to committee members.

Members of the joint party committees are: For Rotary, Sam Levy, chairman; George Peckham, Guy Kelley, William H. Stanger and H. E. Appenzeller; for Kiwanis, C. T. Rippey, chairman; Jack Barrington, Dudley Polhemus, Jess Shippe and Dean Sears. The chairman's gavel will be shared in turn by Robert J. Deininger, Kiwanis president, and Charles V. Jones, Rotary president.

clubs now comprise the 2-D District. Ray Green, Long Beach commercial printer, was opposed for the governorship of District 2-E.

Among those from Torrance who attended the Hollywood convention were: Charles V. Jones, president; Jim Howe, Bernard Bunje, Don Findley, Les Prince, Dave Roberts, Walter Bradford and Sam Levy.

PREPARE FOR SUMMER
Fire Chief A. D. Stevenson's recommendation that Roy E. Wilson be employed as relief engineer and J. D. Legate retained as a call member of the department during the summer vacation season was approved by the city council Tuesday night.
