ICED COFFEE FOR SUMMER MAKES DELIGHTFUL DRINK

The secret of good iced coffee lies in its freshness and proper strength, just as it does in the hot breakfast beverage. Yet many housewives who make excellent hot coffee do not do so well with the iced variety.

loses its flavor and aroma. And sometimes not enough allowance is made for dilution by ice so that the coffee is weaker than it should be.

When the coffee is to be poured hot over ice in glasses it should be brewed double strength, with two heaping tablespoons to each cup of water used. As soon as it is made it should be served or else placed in an air-tight container so that none of the flavor and bouquet will be lost.

Changes Flavor
Another excellent way to make iced coffee is to brew it slightly over normal strength—two level tablespoons to each cup of water—and place it in an air-tight jar in the refrigerator to chill. When ready to serve it may be poured into tall glasses each with one small piece of ice to keep it cold.

An unusual flavor may be imparted to iced coffee merely by mixing it thoroughly in a shaker with ice, powdered sugar and cream, instead of merely putting the different ingredients in the glasses and stirring them together. Just enough ice to chill the drink should be put in the shaker and it should be churned briskly so that it foams when poured out.
