FORBIDDEN JOURNEY (From Peking to Kashmir) by Ella K. Mallart

The story by the charming gift who accompanied Peter Fleming on the thrilling adventure which resulted in his "News from Tartary," last year's best seller travel book. Now this young woman has done her own book. It is not cities and deserts or politics that hold her eye and fancy but character and characteristics of men and women. Each experience is not only vivid but simple so that the reader lives thru it vicariously.

SO GREAT A MAN by David Piggin

This is an enthralling historical novel. The author has undertaken to recreate 10 months of Napoleon's life and to give the reader a fully developed portrait of the Emperor as well as an authoritative insight into the policies and personal relationships which were influencing his career. The Emperor is at the height of his glory, from March, 1808, to January, 1809; into these ten months is packed all the fruit of what has gone before and in them lies the germ of all that is to come. The exacting historian and novelist are so well blended that the story runs at ease with all its exciting turbulent grandeur giving us a magnificent story of Napoleon's intrigue and of Marie Walewska, the one woman Napoleon truly loved.

Misses Gertrude Unger, Katherine Jean Turner and Kitty Clair Lambrigger, Messrs. Wayne Hamilton, Al Lambrigger, Carl Metzler and Vannie Sommers.

MARY FENTRESS

PARIS (UP)—The spring collection of Lucille Paray (ex Jenny) is remarkable for variety, and versatility. It ranges from slacks for vacationing in the South on to fur-trimmed gowns for town wear, sequin-trimmed gowns, and bright flower or geometric prints in which to welcome spring.

But the Paray versatility is even more evident in the way she has developed fashion trends in combination with her meticulous attention to subtle dressmaking details.

Colors? Paray uses mauve-pink for a suit, and adds a blouse in one of the new pastel blue-green shades. Light gray and yellow, black and yellow, kasha, blue and cherry and of course plenty of blue and white, and black and white, are predominant.

The polka dot, nickel size, appears again for accent and contrast—white, on a field of blue, green or burgundy.

Lines? Two-piece suits are always fitted as to skirt—minute tucking and fastenings up the back take care of that—with perhaps several narrow pleats at the side for fullness below the knee.

Jackets are fitted to the waist and bellies, and usually are of hip length. Single-breasted, they often fasten with two or three buttons set close together at the waistline.

Contrasting, the high-necked blouses in a coarse linen-like weave or in white organdy, tucked and ruffled, assure a distinctive ensemble even when the jacket is removed.

Afternoon dresses, too, rarely are belted, and show the same molding to the waist. To compensate for this, skirts are full, with special accent on fullness in the back. Accordion pleats, and tiers of pleats from the waistline down, are other ways of achieving fullness.

Paray likes to give a dress its own jacket or full-length coat. A black dress with ornamental sunburst stitching has a royal blue jacket, with the same elbow-length sleeves as the dress.
