PARIS (U.P.)—New bags show such multiplicity of design, fabric and color that it's a temptation to change your handbag with every dress.

Among the newest ideas is the "book-bag" for both daytime and evening. It is unusual, but not eccentric; roomy, but not bulky. One finds it particularly effective when its a book bound in black velvet and black leather, gilt-edged.

Flat jewel-studded pouches, which look as though they had been lifted from the glamorous land of Arabian Nights, are much in keeping with the oriental atmosphere now pervading fashion salons. Often rather than these precious pouches become an intricate part of an evening or dinner gown. Long hangs a gold one on a heavy gold rope-like cord which is slung low around the hips of a snaky black, long-sleeved dinner dress.

Another jeweled pouch purse hangs like a pendant from a wide necklace made of brilliant green silk material, the same material being used for the dress with which the pouch purse is worn. A floor-length evening coat of light mauve wool completes the exotic ensemble.

At Marjorie Duntan's, hand bags take on the qualities of grandma's reticule—but a reticule far too beautiful to be used for handwork or holey socks. Many of the bags are a foot square and made double so that they simply fold over the arm. One such bag in black antelope has a wide strap handle of emerald green antelope in numerous folds and a top trimmed with black silk fringe.

Rust satin lines another huge bag of black antelope cut as a double flat triangle. Still a third is shaped just like the old-fashioned knitting bag and made of black plush-velvet with red silk embroidery on its ample sides.

TODAY'S FASHION TIP

New bags range in shape from gilt-edged books to copies of grandma's knitting bag.

Mme. Bellini Opening Her Studios for New Season

Mme. Teala Bellini, concert pianist and teacher of piano, announces the opening of her studios Saturday, Sept. 10, for the 1938-39 season. "People are becoming more music-minded," she said "particularly in the study of piano. It is necessary to provide students with a teacher capable of giving a thorough foundation of musicianship."

Mme. Bellini is well known throughout Southern California—not only as a brilliant concert pianist but also as an excellent teacher. She is thoroughly capable of taking any pupil from the beginning to the concert stage. The playing of her pupils is marked by lovely tone quality and musically interpretation. Mme.
