'Washing Machine' to Sift Out Gold (If Any) From Indiana Glacial Sand

MONROVIA, Ind. (U.P.)—A very strange "contraption" on the banks of Sycamore creek in Morgan county, Ind., may pay out the jackpot to a group of Indianapolis men.

It is a newly developed sluice that engineers say will profitably wash gold from the glacial subsoil. The Morgan county subsoil is known to contain gold in small quantities, and the engineers believe that their washing machine will wash enough dirt daily to make a profit.

The sluice was developed by King C. Bard, a Grand Rapids, Mich., mining engineer, and Fred P. Learning, a Purdue University mechanical engineering graduate. They have experimented for more than a year in the Morgan county hills, and believe that every 3,000 pounds of subsoil contains about 40 cents in gold.

Their concern has leased approximately 3,000 acres in the county and intend to exploit the subsoil. They refuse to sell stock in the project, and Bard says that if additional money is needed, the men who provided the experimental, capital will provide the balance.

Their experiments show that the sluice will easily wash 1,500 yards, or 4,500,000 pounds of subsoil, daily. They calculate that the gold retrieved would be worth $600. They believe that the sluice can be speeded up to handle 3,000 yards daily and thus increase the profit.

Bard's and Learning's calculations do not include the possibility of finding nuggets or diamonds, also known to be in the glacial subsoil.

In operation of the sluice the top soil is removed and the subsoil carried to the sluice in trucks. It is moved to the top of a tower by a continuous belt and washed through screens by water piped from the rock bed of Sycamore creek.

Rocks are thrown to one side and black sand, gold, mud and quicksand washed over a 100-foot specially designed sluice. The water carries the mud at a 25-mile an hour speed.

Will Move Around
The gold particles, black sand containing gold ore, precious stones and small pebbles drop to a grid and are forced into traps at one side of the sluice. The trap contents are then placed in a barrel containing mercury. Gold is absorbed by the mer-curry, and the amalgam taken to an Indianapolis refinery. There the mercury is evaporated and the gold remains. The mercury is taken back to the sluice to be used again.

Bard says that operations, if they prove successful, will be continued in Morgan county for five or six years, and then the sluice will be moved to other glacial deposits.

Schools May Accept Gifts of Bibles

Any school district in the county may accept a gift of King James version of the Bible and place it on the reference shelf of the classrooms, according to an opinion written this week by County Counsel J. H. O'Connor for the Temple school district.

Offer of the gift of several Bibles has been made by the Gideon Society, school officials stated. Before accepting it, however, they wished to know whether they would be required to accept publications of certain religious faiths.

Howard of that city appeared at the police station and reported that she intended to file an insanity complaint against him.

Marsh is being held in the city jail pending outcome of this proceeding in the Superior Court.
