

Zoning Hearing Continued for Further Study

especially designed to protect single-family residences altho it has been broadened of late years to accommodate industries, agriculture and business areas.

"From the community standpoint, zoning is essential," he said. "Otherwise, property—any property anywhere—is subject to deterioration in value because noxious features may come in and rob a residential area of its home atmosphere by putting a junk yard or a slaughter house right next door to your home."

Ordinance is Elastic

Eight land-use classifications are used in the proposed Torrance zoning ordinance, which will go to the city council for further study following the Jan. 8 continued public hearing before the Planning Commission. These are: Light agricultural, single- and multiple-family residential areas, retail and general commercial districts, light and heavy manufacturing sectors.

The ordinance, Sampson pointed out, is elastic in that it provides for variance of the provisions to eliminate any undue hardships which may develop in future years and may be amended to provide for later change of the various zones.

Members of the Planning Commission present were McCutcheon, chairman; Charles A. Curtis, secretary; City Engineer Leonard Young and his assistant, Glenn Jain, Robert J. Deininger, J. W. Crowther, Scott R. Ludlow, John Salm and W. A. Felker.
