HOW WILL YOU VOTE TUESDAY?

— An Editorial —

With guns pointed at us across both oceans, ready to open fire upon the least provocation whenever conditions are opportune to Germany and Japan, this is no time for loyal Americans to be apathetic about voting.

Let no one be mistaken. There is real danger ahead and evidences of sabotage and fifth column activities have been detected right here in Torrance and Lomita. In the interests of national defense, we cannot at this time be more specific as it would hamper the work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

But as Eugene Blalock, deputy district attorney, so well said recently before the Torrance Rotary Club, "we don't have to worry so much about the fifth column if the rest of us will stiffen our spinal column." There is no doubt about the loyalty of the vast majority of American citizens, but it is the organized minorities that threaten trouble. And if the usual custom holds true, less than 15 percent of the citizens who should vote at Tuesday's election will no doubt decide the winning ticket. This is due to negligence in registering and neglect in voting.

And all the questionable candidates are not on the Democratic ticket, either. There are "pinkies" in the Republican ranks too, and unless the complacent G.O.P. voters get out in force, there is a good chance that we will have to choose between "two radicals" at the November election. This is particularly true of Washington representatives.

It is not the purpose of this newspaper to attempt to tell anyone how to vote, as that is everyone's privilege. Nor does the editor of this newspaper feel that his judgment is any better than many of his subscribers, particularly if they have the same opportunity to know the facts and the candidates.

But such is not the case. To many the names on Tuesday's primary ballot are just so many names. The majority of voters have neither met the candidates nor do they know their motives and purposes. Naturally, it is difficult to know for whom to vote.

On the other hand, most of the candidates whose names appear on the ballot have been into this newspaper office during the past two months. We have talked with them and at least know something about them. For this reason, and because it is so important at this critical time that SAFE and SANE people whose loyalty to the republic is beyond any doubt be elected to office that we recommend the nomination of Clara N. Colden as representative in Congress on the Democratic ticket, and Clifton A. Hix, as representative in Congress on the Republican ticket.

Because of his proven service to this community, particularly in lifting the tax burden on the Alondra Park district, the donation of the site next to the Torrance Health Center so that it may be used as a youths' recreation center, and the numerous helpful services provided for Lomita we heartily recommend the retention of Supervisor Oscar Hauge.

The election of Eugene U. Blalock to Judge of the Superior Court, Office No. 5, is also recommended.

We have no recommendations to make on candidates to the State Assembly nor the office of District Attorney. However, John T. Rawls seems to have the edge on the Assembly race; and Burton Pitts is going to be hard to beat for re-election.

A Vital Objective for Nazis

These great Tilbury Docks, 25 miles below London on Thames, are an extremely vital military objective to raiding Nazi planes because Germany hopes to cut off Britain from colonial supplies.

Whiskey Administered by Maberley Saves Life of Dying Horse Here

It took a quart of top-grade whiskey but the horse was saved.

And it took Albert Lambert Maberley—whose life-story is published for the first time in the adjoining column—to diagnose the animal's near-fatal illness and direct the administering of the liquor that literally put the horse on his feet again.

D. N. Edwards out in East Torrance had about given up hope for his best horse when Maberley took over the case at the suggestion of a Herald staff-member. The animal was dying of pneumonia and four days and nights of desperate treatment by Edwards and a skilled veterinarian had failed to bring any appreciable improvement.

Maberley took one look at the expiring horse and ordered a quart of whiskey. Edwards was amazed at the prescription but Maberley insisted he knew what could cure the animal. In small doses and with Edwards' help, he poured it down the horse's nostrils.

The result was a miracle to the despairing owner. Later, Maberley said he learned many strange cures for animals of all kinds while living in Africa—the least of which is good Scotch for equine pneumonia victims.

COLLEGE fashions, unless we are mistaken, are going to appeal to many not of college age or over it. For instance, for country goers or walkers in the park on brisk autumn days, the August Harper's Bazaar features among other styles the black and white wool shepherd check, a velvet collar on the jacket, patch pockets and a red leather belt. High white socks, clocked in red, are much less trying with such a short skirt.

Advertisement for new drug store in Kansas City emphasizes that their self-service units do not include radios, auto accessories, women's hosiery, haberdashery or toys. Just a plain drug store without any stock.

Dark Continent Gave London-Born Resident Adventurous Career

at men years his junior for their sedentary lives.

On His Own at 15
"Get out, walk around, work! Keep young and don't forget—rub your head with kerosene and you'll save your hair!" he admonishes them. "Don't get old—poor fellow, where does it hurt the most?" he chuckles.

Maberley was born in great, grey London Jan. 16, 1888. His people were well off and they used to go to Cairo, Egypt, every winter on account of his sister's health. His father had property in England. Young Alfred went with them, sailing out of foggy Britain into the dazzling blue of the Mediterranean and so to the land of the pyramids and Pharaohs. In England he attended a Westminster Abbey Choir school until he was 12 or 13 and then when he was 15 his African adventure began.

The Maberley family had come to Egypt for their regular stay. He was allowed to go up the Nile alone—accompanied by trusted native bearers—to take a look at the Sahara Desert. Then Africa, mother of continents, land of mystic distances and strange peoples, lured him on. He continued on into the Belgian Congo thru the jungles, arrived without a cent to get back to Cairo.

No Trouble to Young Alf
He sent for money to return home but when Father Maberley responded young Alfred had already planned to trek deeper into the Dark Continent. The money went to buy supplies for a safari thru strange Matabeleland, voided Mashonaland, down the Kalahari Desert to Bechuanaland. The young Britisher pushed on to Griqualand, the Orange Free State then under control of the Boers, to Basutoland and—diamonds.

He made his way by trading—and he must have driven some amazing bargains to have traveled the great distances of jungle, desert, bush and mountains, a strapping youth with the sound of London's Bow bells in his ears. "I made out alright," he says. "The natives were friendly and I learned their languages and dialects. The Europeans were always glad to see a white man and I didn't have any trouble."

Loses Track of Family
The diamond mines were in their hey-day in Africa as young Maberley trudged and rode south and soon he was started on a career of diamond-digging. Those most precious of gems were easy to find—to hear Maberley tell it you almost could pick them off the ground. "You know how to look for diamonds, no? Well, you look for garnets—that's right—garnets. And where you find garnets, you find diamonds!"

He made a good stake in diamond-digging and then went after gold. When he was 20 he dropped his pick and shovel and went to British Kaffraria to stop a native uprising. Then back to the Vaal River where he continued his operations and "started" his many another poor man in the business.

He married in Cape Colony and became the father of six children—but today he doesn't know if any of them are alive. His wife died and he went further south to Kleinkarpoof where he contacted the Strangler.

Natives Go On Binge
That meeting was the most dramatic episode in his life and he delights in telling:

"I am the only man who ever escaped a Strangler's hands alive!"

This is the yarn: When he was about 35 and a man of fair fortune in Africa, he decided one day to inspect a farm he had purchased for $5,000 in Griqualand. He gathered together some native porters for the trek. The night before the party was to take out across the veldt, the native Griquas had a drinking bout and, to judge from Maberley's comments, when Griquas drink they practically drown themselves in super-potent liquor.

Early in the morning Maberley gave the order to start but his personal servant—one of the carousing Griquas of the night before—suddenly informed his master he would not go. The native left and soon the manager appeared to inform Maberley that the man refused his pay and wanted to see "the Boss" in person. Maberley went toward the manager's kraal.

"Mauler" Maberley in Action
"Then the Griqua came at me. Before you could say 'knife' he had me down, straddled my chest and was strangling me with his bare hands. I realized instantly I was a victim of a Strangler—a member of one of two homicidal tribes who took blood vows to strangle white men selected at a council. The council must have been held during the drinking bout and I had been singing into them."

The manager who saw the Strangler attack me bolted into the bush. I had nothing in me hands to hit the Strangler with but I began beating him in the head with me fists. Then the wife of the sheriff happened by and she dragged the Strangler off me.

"The native, his head was almost beaten to a pulp—I was a strong man in those days and I beat him as no other man has ever been beaten before—was taken to Kimberley to a hospital where he stayed for six weeks. I had beaten a Strangler at his own game—the only man in the world to escape their powerful hands."

Lucky Maberley continued his African experiences in Kimberley where he saw the first Boer War at first hand. When the second Boer War was on he was in England. He left Africa about 26 years ago, went back to England and then sailed again for the Dark Continent to close out his diamond diggings and seek more adventure in Canada and America.

Life Continues at 82

He landed in Canada and then came to San Francisco. In Los Angeles he helped strengthen the Boy Scout movement and organized two troops which are still active today. He knew Sir Robert Baden-Powell, founder of the Boy Scouts, in Africa and won that famed youth worker's praise for his efforts to expand the Scout program in this country.

Maberley engaged in various business ventures, chiefly in the role of financial backer, in Los Angeles county. He helped one man found a thriving bakery, another to enter the building trade and so on. He became a U. S. citizen and, about 15 years ago, he married Elizabeth Shirley and came to Torrance.

Mrs. Maberley, a charming, well-educated woman with a gift for poetry, passed away here about five years ago. Maberley keeps busy looking after his property in Torrance and insisting that potential bald-pates try his kerosene cure for their nog-gins.

He's crammed a lot of life into 82 years and, judging from his hale and hearty appearance, there's a lot of life left in the old boy yet.

No. Torrance Residents Compliment Hauge at Party in School House

A crowd of over 200 residents of North Torrance came out to express their appreciation to Supervisor Oscar Hauge Tuesday evening for the help he has given them in casing the Alondra Park special assessment burden on their property.

The party, arranged by Mrs. Lela Gomer, included a number of Torrance city officials. Supervisor Hauge was introduced by Mayor Tom F. McGuire. The affair was held in the Petty avenue school. Refreshments were served following a talk by Dr. Hauge.
