

The New Roll of Honor

MAJOR PAUL ALBERT PUTNAM
U. S. Marine Corps, Commanding Marine Fighting Squadron, FMF-211 at Wake Island

ALOYSIUS HERMAN SCHMITT
Lieut. (J. G.) U. S. Navy (Chaplain Corps)

Darkness had brought its brief reprieve to Wake Island. It was the night of December 20, 1941. Two men stood on the beach near a waiting patrol-bomber. Major Paul Putnam, the Marine Corps squadron commander, and Bayler, a second major, who had fought through thirteen days of hell on Wake; now flying back, under orders to report at Pearl Harbor.

Putnam held out his hand. "Time to shove off, Walt. Good luck. You have my report."

But Bayler hesitated. "No other message, Paul?"

Putnam knew what he meant. Some personal word for Virginia, his wife; for the three children, in Coronado. "Yes. Tell them everything's all right. . . . Back in the shadows, Bayler saw the last remaining fighter, built from bullet-torn wreckage. Before the Japs returned at daybreak, Putnam would take off in the lone ship. Carrying the Marine globe, anchor and eagle aloft for one hopeless, gallant fight.

For their heroic stand, Putnam and his full squadron, WMF-211 have been cited by the President of the United States.

It was an hour to church call at Pearl Harbor. Aboard the battleship Oklahoma, young Chaplain Schmitt was reading his brief sermon when the clamor "battle stations" shattered the Sunday quiet. Then the crescendo roar of Japanese dive-bombers. Schmitt hurried below by his post, the dressing station fer wounded.

An explosion shook the old dreadnaught, as a torpedo pierced her side. The stricken battleship abandoned, slowly began to roll over. In a rush of panic, a dozen men jammed the compartment door. Through the din came the young chaplain's voice. Quiet, bringing back reason. Schmitt opened the door, bracing himself as water swept in. Two men carried out an unconscious sailor, and a few more escaped by the passage before the swift-rising water cut it off.

Now only the narrow portholes were left. One man crawled up the tilting bulkhead, twisted through to safety. A petty officer caught Schmitt's arm to help him up, but the chaplain shook his head. He was the senior man, Lieut. Schmitt went down with his ship.

This newspaper will republish the community's "Honor Roll" of local men in the armed services next Thursday. Scores of additions and corrections have been received since the list was first published Mar. 5. This newspaper will be glad to receive additional information pertaining to local men in service in order to make the Mar. 26 publication complete and accurate.

THIRD REGISTRANT WANTS TO ENLIST
First of the third Selective Service registration force of 2,070 men in this district to announce he wanted to enlist in the Army was Frank H. Adams, former resident of Rolling Hills and sales manager with the R. G. Hanson company and now a Long Beach resident. Although married and the father of two youngsters, Adams wants to volunteer under the new officer-candidate program for men with dependents who are financially able to seek commissions by advancement from the ranks. A building contractor with eight jobs in progress, Adams simply said: "We can't leave this war job to George—everybody has to do his part and I believe this is the best way of doing mine."

Salad Bowl

And Now—Crystal for Salads. Modern American glass bowl, heavy-blown from brilliant lead crystal, is the last word on smart buffet and dinner tables. It's a made-in-America product and marks the renaissance of fine glass in this country. Salad-making at the table is more fun than ever when it's done in a crystal bowl.
