"I WILL' vs. 'YOU MUST'

In general the people of a democracy decide for themselves what they will do. To be sure, there is a constitution to observe and there are laws to obey, but the people can amend the constitution and revise the laws. In an election the "losers" agree in advance to submit to the will of the majority. The spirit of democracy is expressed in the words "I will."

In a dictatorship an over-all authority says "You must." Even in the rare "elections" there is little choice but to line up with the "leader" by voting "Ja." Compulsion is the characteristic of a dictatorship.

When war threatens, and more especially when it, breaks, democracies find it necessary to use some compulsory methods. In the United States the Selective Service Act was the first of the compulsory war measures which affected any considerable number of Americans. Even under that act it was still possible for men to choose their branch of service, that is to volunteer.

As the war has progressed in extent and intensity, more and more features of our daily living have been put on a compulsory basis. This is naturally resented by many freedom-loving people, even though they recognize the reason and the need for compulsion. Some—a mignority—either refuse to comply or comply so reluctantly that serious enforcement problems erise.

These non-compliers violate the rationing regulations by secret hoarding. They cause others to violate price regulations by offering bonuses in order to get scarce articles, (This practice is called a black market" or "bootlegging.") They waste rubber and gas by fast driving, by taking unnecessary trips, by failing to pool their cars.

In several instances the government has postponed putting com-pulsory regulations into effect, preferring to accomplish the desired and necessary results by voluntary action if possible. What can Americans do to make voluntary cooperation effec-tive, both to minimize further regulations and to get maximum ob-servance of regulations already in effect? There are two principal strance of regulations already in effect? There are two principal ways:

1. They can become thoroughly informed.
2. They can create public sentiment.
Most people will voluntarily and gladly comply with governmental suggestions for the common good when they really understand the situation which confronts this nation today, the absolute need for everyone to help, either as a member of the aimed forces, as a producer in industry or agriculture of vital supplies, or as a transporter of those supplies, and by care in using essentials, be accrificing non-essentials, by investing in war bonds and stamps.
Clubs and organizations can help in this spreading of information by means of their meetings and club publications. Individual club members can further the effort through the other organizations ought to be encouraged to inform their members about these important matters by means of lectures, discussions, study groups, forums, etc. Law enforcement officers say that public sentiment behind a law is almost essential to effective enforcement. An informed public will develop a sentiment which will facilitate the enforcement of regulations already passed. It may even bring about voluntary compliance, however refluetant, and so obviate the necessity for some further regulations.

The United States is engaged in a titanic struggle, an all-out, total war. To win it is going to take the cooperation of every American. If compulsory measures are necessary to get cooperation—to that extent we are misusing a part of our resources. If we meet the challenge voluntarily—to that extent we are demonstrating that strength and effectiveness of democracy. Let's say "I Will" and then do whatever is necessary.
