Motorists Offered Checkup to Avoid Costly Repairs

Any motorist unfortunate enough to experience the failure of some vital part of his car this fall may consider himself fortunate if he is again able to use the machine within six or eight weeks—or longer. The reasons: Extreme shortage of certain bearings, gears, pistons, valve stems and guides, rear axles, gaskets and other essentials; acute shortage of skilled mechanics; rapidly increasing breakdowns of many cars, especially models five years old or older.

Such is the summary of today's transportation situation—the most critical in motoring history—as gleaned from statements of leading auto parts houses and repair establishments of the Pacific Coast area.

Thus, mindful of the fact that older cars need better care, the operators of Mobilgas stations are again launching their Winter-proof car-protection program to help drivers guard every possible mile of their cars' lives.

"The Winter-proof plan announced today," declares W. C. Campbell, wholesale agent for General Petroleum Corporation, "offers opportunity for many to help make sure their cars will 'see them through' for the duration."

"Mobilization, by the celebrated X-Ray method, necessary crank case and gear oil changes, radiator service, inspection of tires, batteries, air and oil filters, spark plugs, ignition systems, wheel bearings and other important parts—are offered and performed by Mobil Men as the need is indicated for each car."

"No motorist can afford to neglect Winter-proofing. And Winter-proof service appointments should be made early, because of heavy demands for car service work. This will help prevent possible breakdowns. As we've often said: 'It's better to be a week early

BACKING UP THE CLAIM . . . that "Older Cars Need Better Care," a national survey reveals the startling information that 20,000 car graveyards, like the above, are filling up with scrapped machines at the rate of 4,000 to 5,000 per day. Of the autos still in use, more than one-third are over seven years old.
