L. M. Bender On 'Henry A. Wiley' In Jap Battles

L. M. Bender, coxswain, Torrance, and other crewmen of the destroyer-minelayer USS Henry A. Wiley had a hand in transforming the ship from a "half-breed" into a "thoroughbred," ready for any role she may be assigned in the peacetime Navy.

Originating in the shipyard as a "half-breed"—part destroyer and part minelayer—the Henry A. Wiley proved her worthiness to the title of "thoroughbred" in the last two stepping stones to Tokyo and Victory.

At Iwo Jima, she was engaged in bombardment, illumination and screening duties. At Okinawa, where she arrived for duty eight days before the invasion forces, the Wiley remained for the whole show. Before it was over, she had knocked down 10 Jap planes and two Baka bombs, assisted on two other downed planes, and was credited with still another "probable."

Boys Who Return From "Rocks Of South Pacific" Need Understanding

Those boys, some of them in their teens, who spent months and years on the rocks which they call islands in the South Pacific do not come back the same; but they come back to parents, friends, and families who are the same.

The result is maladjustment of relationship which threatens to become a number one crime problem unless the folks at home "give them a chance, understand them, realize what they have been through, be lenient with their changed attitude toward life."

Offering this advice was Tom B. Clark, himself a chief yeoman in the U. S. Navy on the South Pacific "rocks" for three years. He discussed his experiences at the meeting of the Lions club in the Civic Auditorium Tuesday noon.

Vern A. Harmer Served Navy In Fleet Air Wing

Vern A. Harmer, sonarman, second class, USNR, 2214 Maricopa, and other Navy men at tached to Fleet Air Wing One helped write the climax to the story of that unit's major role in the closing stages of the war in the Pacific—a story that now is being told in detail by the Navy.

Fleet Air Wing One kept the Japs off balance from Korea to China and Formosa, and to Japan, itself.

But it was at Okinawa that the wing had its roughest going. An idea of the importance of the operations there was imparted to the officers and men of the unit by Rear Admiral John Dale Prince, USN, then commander of the wing. He told them: "The Japs are beginning to find out that units of Fleet Air Wing One are based here. They're mad as hornets. We don't propose to let up on them a minute. Let's turn to!"

Proof that all hands did "turn to" lies in the records of the wing, which shows that it sent more than 175,000 tons of Jap shipping to the bottom with its Mariners, Coronados and Privateers, damaged at least that much more tonnage, and shot down more than 40 enemy planes.

Units of the wing still were harassing the Japs from their base at Okinawa when the Japs surrendered.
