Repatriation Of War Dead Is Universal Tradition Of Mankind

Active opponents of the program to repatriate from foreign lands the remains of this country's Gold Star heroes, ignore the historical fact that man, almost universally, has demanded that the remains of himself and his loved ones be interred "at home," amid friendly surroundings.

This fact is reflected, according to J. Hugh Sherfey of Stone & Myers Mortuary, by the huge number of requests filed with the War Department by the next-of-kin for the return to this country of the remains of those who gave their lives overseas in both World Wars.

The funeral-service profession neither advocates nor opposes repatriation, believing it to be a personal matter to be decided solely by the next-of-kin. Morticians are expected to play a prominent role in the repatriation program when remains of the heroes commence to arrive in this country, but thus far the funeral-service profession has acted merely to disseminate information and professional advice.

"Sentiment plays a dominating role in funeral arrangements. Sentiment almost always has demanded that efforts be made to return the remains of loved ones to familiar surroundings for final interment. This tradition has ruled through history, among civilized and primitive peoples alike."

Religious sentiment has demanded through the ages that the remains of Orientals, including Chinese and Japanese, must be returned to their native lands. "This sentiment is so strong among these people, that the Japanese army, during the war, took great pains to return the ashes of slain soldiers to their families, even when the going was the toughest. The remains of Chinese who die in this country always have been shipped back to China for final interment, in keeping with sentiment."

Even primitive American Indians, before the coming of the white man, practiced "repatriation." When an Indian passed away while the tribe was on the move, his remains were carefully protected by being placed in a cave, suspended above ground from a tree, or placed on an elevated structure, out of reach of animals. When the tribe returned, it carefully gathered the remains and took them "home" for final disposition.

The sentiment for "repatriation" among the Indians was so strong in most tribes, that destruction or hiding of an enemy tribesman's remains was the height of Indian war atrocities. Many tribes took great pains to protect the remains of fallen enemies and to return them to their own tribes.

Governor Urges Veterans Keep NSLI Insurance

All California WWII veterans are urged by Gov. Earl Warren to avail themselves of "valuable insurance protection" for their families. Governor Warren's plea was contained in a formal proclamation pointing out benefits of National Service Life Insurance, and requesting every veteran to take advantage of "this last opportunity to obtain valuable protection for his family."

The governor's proclamation said in part: "During the years of war, our servicemen and women derived comfort from the knowledge that their families and dependents were economically protected under the National Service Life Insurance plan made available to them by the government of the United States. "In civilian life this insurance continues to give peace of mind to many veterans and their families. Its renewal is one of the wisest investments a veteran can make because it provides financial security for his dependents at a very low cost. It is in the interest of every honorably discharged California veteran of World War II to call his attention to the fact that Aug. 1 will be the last date on which it will be possible to reinstate lapsed policies of National Service Life Insurance without physical examination."

Veterans are urged to visit the nearest Veterans Administration office for full particulars on NSLI.

MEXICO AUTO FEES
The Mexican government has reduced the fee on automobile permits for American motorists from $2.10 to 10 cents, the Automobile Club of Southern California advises. Reasons given for this move were to "encourage American motor touring and to stimulate freedom in Inter-American travel."
