spitals in the Los Angeles reonal area.

There are more chaplains in the three Los Angeles area VA ospitals today than there were the entire VA two years back, hey are all veterans themselves,
hey served as the patient reved. Their spiritual counsel and guidance is available to paents at all times.

The Red Cross and VA social revice have trained crews in the ospitals to assist with the famiand personal problems. Vet erans organizations maintain staffs to serve all former service people.

Thus, all of the VA patient's problems relative to federal, state, employment, and miscellaneous benefits, as well as personal affairs, are taken care of for him. He doesn't have to worry about these things—he wouldn't have time to worry anyway. His time is occupied with other things.

Every possible type of entertainment is available. Top artists give generously of their time and ability. Games suited and adapted to his physical setupare there for the asking. Library push carts bring him the latest literature.

But the best part of all is the opportunity for vocational—and academic study. Scores of veterans have finished their high school studies or advanced in technical or college courses while patients in VA hospitals. Hundreds have added to their trade and vocational skills. Many more have acquired new skills and have left the hospital better able to make a living than they were when they entered.

All, of this has a purpose.
