Cop Fogged In

Accidents Around Area None to See

So you thought it was foggy last Thursday morning. Let Police Sergeant G. S. Evans tell you about it.

Sergeant Evans, who crept through the smothering fog to the intersection of Newton street and 101 highway to investigate an accident reported there, said that several times, following his policy of driving slowly enough to stop in the distance he could see ahead, he found himself completely stopped.

Arriving at the intersection, he said he saw at least 12 cars in assorted positions at the intersection, heard horns honking all around him with drivers cursing or staring hopelessly into the white blanket of fog.

After working one and a half hours to unravel the tangle of the mixup he said he could see and feel and hear, he learned that in the meantime there had been two other accidents across the street that he couldn't see.

Lenarth, who is now master mechanic for General Petroleum's Torrance refinery, joined the company in 1920 as a machinist. Originally stationed at the company's Vernon plant, he has been at Torrance since 1934.
