West Basin Officials Pleased With New Water Legislation

All the legislation recommended by the West Basin Water Association as necessary to protect the fresh water storage capacity of the West Basin and other basins of the state have been enacted into law, according to a spokesman for the association.

Most important of the measures, AB 2712, which appropriated $750,000 to prove plans for controlling and preventing salt water intrusion into ground water basins, was pushed vigorously by the association.

"With authority and means now made available to stop encroachment of sea water and to eventually accomplish complete restoration of ground water levels, it seems clear that an orderly, logical and far-sighted plan could at once be formulated," the spokesman said.

Sites to be used to spread water were discussed by the association officials, and the recommendation made that such water spreading sites be acquired at once, before normal development take over the areas.

"There are two and only two sites where water spreading may be successfully conducted," the official said. He located one generally as "East of Redondo" and the other as west of the international Airport.

of expanded metal collecting plate, electrodes—18 to each section. The 510 discharge electrodes are wires suspended vertically in the duct between the plates and directly in the gas stream. A mechanical rectifier and transformer supply electrical energy up to 75,000 volts to each precipitator.

As gas passes the discharge electrodes, the minute dust particles receive a negative electrical charge and are attracted to the positive collecting electrode plates. Dust particles adhere to the plates until freed by vibration and dropped into hoppers below for disposal. The cleaned gas is then emitted through the furnace stacks.

count of his actions at the time of the robbery and was taken to the city jail for booking on a charge of attempted robbery. Tuesday Escobar phoned Chief John Stroth and said he wanted to hold a parley. Stroth went to the Pueblo area to talk with Escobar. The escapee wanted Stroth to promise not to put him in jail.

Stroth refused. Just then by chance a police car drove into the scene and Escobar fearing a trap ran among the closely grouped houses. Stroth hampered by several small children in the line of fire had to refrain from using his service pistol.

At the time of his booking Escobar was wearing a small goatee. He was dressed in a grey pin striped suit and sport shirt. He is described as Mexican, five feet, five inches tall, 125 pounds, black hair, and medium complexion.

In the meanwhile Police Chief John Stroth was confident that Escobar's break would be no more successful than that of an earlier jail escapee—Fred Tilden, also 19 years old. Tilden scooted out the back door of the local jail last November while being booked. He is currently serving out a sentence in the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Detention Farm.

anhydrous ammonia, is injected directly into the soil by tractor equipment or dissolved in irrigation water which carries it to the roots of crops. California agriculturists, in pioneering this application of ammonia, have made it so successful in boosting crop yields that the demand for the product far exceeds the present supply. The direct injection of ammonia—the richest source of nitrogen—into the soil has spread from the Pacific Coast states and Arizona to many states in the South and Midwest.

Shell Chemical also operates at Pittsburg, California, near San Francisco, the largest ammonia manufacturing facilities west of the Rockies. The bulk of the output is used directly as a nitrogen fertilizer to increase yields of grain, cotton, vegetable and fruit crops. Present manufacturing units at the Dominguez plant produce solvents and industrial alcohols. The new plant facilities, in addition to the nitrogen fertilizer, will produce ammonia for the manufacture of munitions, nitric acid, commercial explosives, paper pulp and other industrial needs.
