VIRGINIA HEWITT 'SPACE PATROL'S' BLONDE HEROINE Sky Rockets to TV's "World of the Future"

For a girl who didn't have her heart set on becoming an actress, Virginia Hewitt, the blonde heroine of "Space Patrol," Channel 7 at 6:45 p. m., has come a long way. Born in Shreveport, Louisiana, and brought up in Kansas City, Missouri, Virginia made her Hollywood debut in 1945 as a traveling companion to her older sister, Penny, who tired of Kansas City and decided to live on the west coast but didn't want to make the trip alone.

In between TV stints, Virginia appeared in a couple of independent movie productions which were probing the science fiction field. Her experience in those made her a logical choice for the part of Carol, the daughter of the Secretary General of the United Planets of the Universe, in ABC-TV's "Space Patrol," a world of the future thriller which, shortly after its debut on March 9, 1950, swept the country with its popular appeal. A casual glimpse at the show will reveal that Virginia Hewitt's appeal can't be ignored, albeit.

The daughter of an oil company official, Virginia found her economic existence no less restricted by not working but she did find life boring with nothing to do. So she accepted Penny's advice and registered with a model agency. But the jobs were far between. To bridge the gap, Ginny also took dramatic courses with little theater groups. She played them all from the Bliss Hayden to the Masque Theatre and the Pasadena Playhouse.
