Few Precautions Make Floor Installation Easy

from SMALL HOMES GUIDE

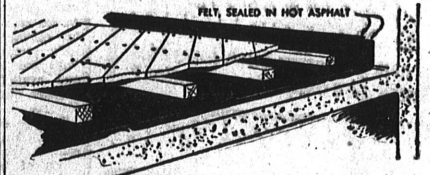

Hardwood flooring—favored by most people for its beauty and durability—is easy to install, according to Small Homes Guide, provided a few precautions are taken. Lay the floor last, after plaster, concrete and the work have dried and woodwork and trim have been installed. Make sure the house is warm and dry. Allow for expansion along the walls.

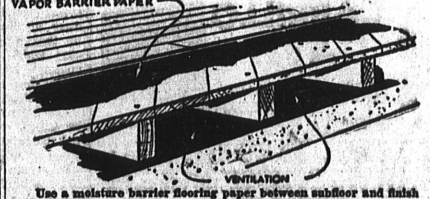

Sub-flooring of softwood, 25/32-inch thick—should be well seasoned, laid diagonally with two 16d nails at each joint and board end.

Sub-flooring of 1/2-inch plywood is also recommended because of its enormous strength. Joists should be bridged at least every eight feet.

With concrete slab construction, an underfill of cedar or washed gravel is usually necessary. Also use a felt waterproofing membrane.

Use a moisture barrier flooring paper between subfloor and finish floor. Provide ventilation to avoid sealed-in dampness.
