By Los Angeles County Medical Association
A healthy baby cries an average of two hours during each 24 hours of the first week of life. It is expected that, in the first few days after birth, an infant will cry vigorously for at least a few minutes several times a day. Absence of crying during these important first few days is an indication that the infant may be ill.

Because the duration of normal crying varies, it is difficult to determine when the crying should be regarded as an indication of illness or family care. There are certain infants, classified as good babies, who settle early into an uninterrupted state of placidity until they receive a painful physical injury, such as a fall or their first immunization injection.

Crying during the first few months of life gives the infant exercise and expands his lungs. Mothers as a rule learn to interpret the baby's cry. The cry may mean hunger, he may need a change, his bodiethings may be bunched under him, he may be sick or he may be just plain mad, for many infants cry from temper.

Mothers should not rush to pick the baby up every time he cries, or he will soon cry to be picked up.

Grandmother says babies of today seem more contented and happier than a generation ago. Naturally—today there is better nutrition, more sensible clothing, more successful prevention of infection, and improved attitudes and behavior of parents and other adults in caring for babies.

Camino Completes Commerce Building
When summer school classes open at El Camino college July 1, commercial students will meet for classes in a new building.

Built to harmonize with the low California modern design of El Camino college, the commerce building will feature radiant heating from the ceilings, something new in junior colleges. The plaster and asphalt tiling also fits into the general color scheme.

Electricians Sought
The city of Los Angeles has announced an examination for communications electrician at a salary of $319 to $450 per month. Applications must be filed in room 5 of Los Angeles city hall by May 26.
