

Christ, Returns to Earth In 1953, Says Egyptologist

Is this the year of decision? Back in the 1930's, Dr. William Ashe Everest, noted Egyptologist and self-styled former European advisor to an Egyptian prince, electrified an audience of 75 at the Woman's Clubhouse here when he predicted the return of Christ to this world as Lord of Lords in 1953.

In speaking of the great pyramid Gizeh, the doctor explained how Egyptologists who made a study of the pyramids have predicted every event that has happened. He told of the waiting for the end of World War I, which was expected the 11th month, the 11th day, and the 11th hour of 1918.

In 1968, the cycle of the pyramids will be complete, Dr. Everest said. Dictator nations will annihilate themselves, and the Prince of Peace will return to earth.

We haven't long to wait to find out if the doctor was right.

Vary Postcard Routine, Send Edible Souvenirs Back Home

Sending souvenirs of a vacation trip to the folks back home, and collecting them to bring back memories through the years is a popular American pastime.

Here's a new souvenir idea, with a tantalizing aroma to tease the nostrils and a luscious flavor to tickle the taste buds. Instead of sending postcards or collecting small figurines, whenever you go on your vacation, select edible souvenirs. The tidbits will give a vacation taste to the stay-at-homers, and you'll be able to recall your trip with a mouthful for many months afterward.

Nearly every state has certain delicacies that are specialties of their particular localities. The peerless maple syrup from Vermont, the Benneiced cookies from South Carolina, the smoked turkey from Arkansas, or Louisiana's Creole foods, from Louisiana, the famed fig preserves from Roanoke, Va., these and many more, some with interesting historical backgrounds, make wonderful souvenirs and gifts.

Take, for instance, cheese. The cheese lover can relish the smoked varieties from Minnesota, the little-known Helvetia from West Virginia, the tany Black Canyon kind from Colorado, the spicy Iowa blue, or the recently developed Runesten cheese from Wyoming where, incidentally, is found the world's biggest cheese factory.

Various sections of the country often prepare the same product with interesting flavor differences. For instance, Iowa's Franzburg hams, canned, boxed, and cooked with fruit decorations, are distinctly different from Tennessee's spicy variety or Virginia's smooth-tasting kind. Sausage in the Pennsylvania Dutch farming country is subtly different from that found
