CRITICS ARE FORGOTTEN

It's easy to criticize the work of another person. A man whose name is William Shakespeare wrote verse and produced plays. A man whose name is John Payne Collier gained notoriety while picking Shakespeare's work to pieces, laughing at it, making fun of it but who is now remembered? I doubt if you have ever heard of the latter but few indeed who has not spent many pleasant hours with William Shakespeare.

The "Knocker" makes more noise than the person who quietly builds, who is constructive in thought and action. He is the one whom we admire. Last week, last evening, today there are the wreckers; unable to build they take delight in tearing down — but they are soon pushed aside, forgotten.

It is the builders we remember.
