

REAL HOT RODDERS . . . Chief Cochise III, Brent Shirley, and Kims Browning take a long look at the motor of Kim's ear. The 72-year-old grandson of the famed Indian warrior and chief of the Apaches is a hot rod enthusiast and served as a pilot during the last war. He has also engaged in a variety of other occupations, ranging from the law to crop during. He visited friends, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Shirley, 241 Via los Miradores, last week,

Looks Young

Since he looks considerably younger than his actual age, the Army was greatly surprised to discover at the time of his discharge in 1948 that one of their top pilotsewas 46 and not 44, as Cochise had reported on his application. Even to day, he looks 25 years younger than his 72 years.

His flying, however, led to a serious accident in which hewas serious accident in which hewas serious in jurged in 1952. He also is a hot rod enthusiast and likes to attend drag races. While he was in Torrance, he helped young Brent Shirley and a friend, Kim Browning work on their souped-up auto. Throughout the years, he has engaged in a variety of other occupations. The museum which ran at Meyers Flat was washed away down to the foundation in the disastrous floods which swept central California several years ago.

Curios at Sea

"I guess most of the curios are out at sea somewhere now," he noted.

He is now in the western jewelry business.

daughters and four grandchildren.

Throughout his life, he has sought to better his people, who, he declared are self-sufficient and are not wards of the government like many tribes. His people are constantly seeking to better themselves, he reported.

While he was here, he was spied by a small boy who wide-eyed wanted to know whether he was an Indian.

"I am," Cochise replied.

"Are you Cochise?" the lad asked.

"I am,"

"Aw gwan. He's dead," the youngster piped, as he walked away.
