Career Opportunity for Youth Called Best in World History

Career opportunities for the educated have reached a peak in the history of the nation and of the world, and the future holds the promise of even better prospects for every child who will go back to school this fall.

More good jobs are looking for people to fill them than there are properly educated and trained people who are looking for jobs. The demand will accelerate over time as the frontiers of science are expanded, and the standard of living in America is raised still higher.

This is true at every level of human activity and in every field of employment, whether it be business, industry, consumer services, the professions, art or education itself.

Need Is Great
So great is the need in all fields that special inducements are offered young graduates of colleges and high schools, including "earning while learning" positions.

Though for long, far seeing executives of important industries have been sending scouts to colleges in search of talent, the invasion, reached its peak this past year.

And at the high school level, local businessmen in many cities have engaged in urging 'teen agers who may not plan on going to college, to stay at home and go to work for home town business.

Talent Sought
Though the greatest number of career opportunities appear to be in the field of engineering and science, expansion of business has created heavy demand for talent to be trained for executive positions. More need for good advertising men and women has sent publication and agencies on a search for bright young folk.

The mechanically inclined youngsters who love to tinker with cars and who can dream of nothing more exciting than becoming experts in automobile maintenance have jobs waiting for them. Those who enjoy association with merchandise and people can have careers in selling. The demand for office workers makes way for more and more secretaries.

While business and industry seeks specially trained people for some jobs and uniquely talented ones for others, there is a growing emphasis on the cultural background of the individuals they hire. This places more than ordinary emphasis on schooling in the arts, history and the social sciences.

SOUP IS GOOD for any school child says sister, especially when she may "create" her own specialty such as combining beef noodle and pea soup and milk.

Grownups May Outnumber Kids In Classrooms

There's a good chance that more adults will be going back to school this fall and winter than all of the children who will be enrolled in kindergarten, elementary and secondary schools combined.

Arthur P. Crabtree, a vice president of the Adult Education Association of the United States, wrote recently in the New York Times that "In the nation as a whole some 35,000,000 grown ups are learning anew about this business of living more intelligently."

They are enrolling in all manner of classes to study everything from citizenship to home decoration, literature and the arts, as well as trade.

Add to these the number of business executives who will be taking special courses in management; professional men going to lectures on progress in their field, skilled mechanics going to class to expand their knowledge of developments in their fields, and it seems just about everybody will be going back to school.
