... Ann Landers

learned too late, Ann, that love doesn't pick types.

I gave myself, body and soul, to a married man. He deceived me into believing nothing could keep us apart. I made him the center of my universe. Nothing else mattered. Then one fine day he told me we'd have to see each other "less" because the situation at home was getting shaky and he couldn't afford to have trouble with his family.

couldn't afford to have trouble with his family.

I knew this was the end. In plain English it meant his wife and children came first. And why shouldn't they? Why was I too stupid to see it? Did you know, Ann, you can actually feel it when your heart breaks?—ONE WHO KNOWS To learn how to keep your boy friend in line without losing him. Send for ANN LANDERS new book. Dear Weak: Teenagers who are ONLY dancing should have no objections to the open door policy.

Insist she respect your gudgment and stick to your guns, Explain that this has nothing to do with trust. It is a matter of good taste.

You can demonstrate your confidence by keeping busy in another part of the house when she has guests. Make yourself scarce and she'll be less inclined to "shut you out."

Dear Ann Landers: I am not writing for advice—you've already advised me. But like a fool, I didn't listen. I'm writing in hopes that I can save someone else a broken heart. I was one of those women who thought she was different—too smart to be caught in a mess. I wasn't the type. I learned too late, Ann, that love doesn't pick types.
